10 Coal Mine Locals Vote To Continue Walkout

Spokesmen of Large Majority of Strikers Content To Let U. S. Step In

By the Associated Press

Wilkes-Barre, Pa., Jan. 13.—Saying they were content to "let the Government make the next move," union representatives of 10 of the 16 locals involved in a wildcat strike of 19,000 anthracite miners reported at a special meeting tonight that their membership had decided to continue the walkout.

Of the other six locals, two voted to return to work, two were unclassified because of not having held meetings, and two were not represented.

Local President Defiant

Reporting that his local, Baltimore No. 5 of the Delaware and Hudson Coal Co., had voted to go back to work, Frank Henihan, its president, said:

"Four hundred men in my local have voted to abide by the decision of the War Labor Board, and as a member of the American Legion and the United Mine Workers, I defy any of you to stop us from going back.

"I did everything I could. I called Tom Kennedy (secretary-treasurer of the United Mine Workers of America) and sent a telegram to President Roosevelt. We are going back to work tomorrow."

Fred Schrader, committeeman of South Wilkes-Barre local, which voted to stay out, told the meeting, "We are not unpatriotic. Our membership instructed us to tell you that we have sons and daughters fighting dictatorship overseas, and we are fighting a dictatorship here at home. We are not going to work."

Membership of Locals

The 10 locals polled as voting to continue the strike were Glen Alden's Truesdale, employing 900; Huber, 1000; Nottingham, 1000; Woodward, 1200; Lance, 1200; South Wilkes-Barre, 1400; Old Washington, 500; also No. 7 Local, Susquehanna Collieries Co., 1600, and Franklin Colliery of the Pagnotti Enterprises, 400.

Besides the Baltimore No. 5, employing 600, the Wanamie Colliery of Glen Alden, with 1200 members, vowed to return. Avondale and Bliss locals of Glen Alden were not represented and No. 20 Tunnel and Sugar locals were not yet classified.

Vigorous Action Promised

The men walked out on an unauthorized strike 15 days ago in protest against an increase of 50 cents a month in United Mine Workers' dues and in support of a demand for a $2-a-day wage increase.

The WLB stepped into the picture yesterday with the declaration that "unless this threat to the safety of our Nation is immediately terminated the board will exercise all powers within its jurisdiction to fulfill its obligations to the country." The statement was taken to mean that the board would, if necessary, recommend that President Roosevelt take over the mines.

Meanwhile Representative McCormick, Majority Floor Leader of the House of Representatives, said in Washington that those responsible for the strike are guilty of "what well might be termed close to treason."

Much Production Lost

The loss of production has been estimated between 300,000 and 400,000 tons since the strike started.

In view of WLB's demand that the strike end at once it was uncertain what action would be taken at tomorrow's scheduled meeting of the Tri-District Committee at Hazleton. The committee met last Sunday and announced a general strike would be called on Friday unless the $2 daily increase in wages was granted.

In Washington, informed sources who declined to be named said Pennsylvania anthracite producers had been "requested" by the Office of the Coordinator of Solid Fuels to halt shipments to Canada or west of Erie, Pa., to ease the tight situation resulting from the strike.

Canada Asks Murray To Prevent Steel Strike

Ottawa, Jan. 13 (AP).—Canada appealed to Philip Murray, president of the CIO, today for action to prevent a threatened strike in a second of the Dominion's Big Three steel plants and end a walkout already in effect at another.

Labor Minister Humphrey Mitchell, in a telegram last night to Murray as president of the United Steelworkers of America (C. I. O.), asked his "active intervention to require all union members to remain at work, and those at Sydney (Nova Scotia) to resume work" after workers at the Algoma Steel Corp. at Sault Ste. Marie voted to strike at 7 a. m. (E. W. T.) Thursday.

Jobs Over $4500 Involved

Patronage Rider Delays WMC In Selecting Executive Staff

By Ben W. Gilbert
Post Staff Writer

Vital war operations of the War Manpower Commission have been slowed down materially by a patronage-rider which was attached to the Commission's last appropriation measure, investigation by The Post revealed yesterday.

The rider, which requires Manpower Chairman Paul V. McNutt to submit all appointments to jobs paying more than $4500 a year to the Senate for confirmation, is delaying all key appointments an average of a month and has made the job of recruiting skilled personnel subject to any political pressure which United States Senators armed with the powerful weapon of "senatorial courtesy" care to exercise.

A number of persons believed to be unusually well qualified for certain key posts have refused to accept jobs under McNutt and subject themselves to the possible embarrassment of being made the key figure at a Senate committee hearing.

This has proved particularly awkward as most persons with background needed by WMC are already employed and need to be persuaded to take a war job with the Government. Persons interested in Government employment also turn more often to the Office of Price Administration, War Production Board and other agencies where confirmation by the Senate is not required.

To avoid embarrassment, WMC has followed the practice of clearing prospective appointments beforehand informally with the Senators from the appointee's State. Once informally approved, the name is then sent to the White House for transmittal to the Senate. Once in the Senate, it is referred to the Military Affairs Committee which gives the two Senators involved an opportunity to protest before acting on the nominations and transmitting them to the Senate for final approval.

The whole process is time consuming, and particularly awkward since WMC may not put any prospective appointee to work until he has been approved. The rider has been in effect since late last October.

The need to get approval from the applicant's Senators has given the Senators an opportunity to present names of favorites for other

Capital Gets Oil Supply For Few Days

Barges Arrive as Senate Committee Continues Inquiry

While a special Senate committee was investigating the fuel oil situation, the acute shortage here was alleviated somewhat with the arrival yesterday of oil barges from Baltimore. The shipment, it was found, was enough to keep dealers in supply for at least the next three or four days.

Meanwhile, Petroleum Administrator Harold L. Ickes acted "to provide for more equitable wartime distribution" of gasoline and fuel oil on the East Coast by restricting gasoline and fuel oil deals and industrial and commercial consumers to ten-day inventories.

Homeowners, suppliers' bulk terminals, refinery storage tanks, and filling stations were specifically exempt.

The effect of the order will be to prevent the hoarding of oil supplies by dealers and commercial users equipped with large storage capacity and is a companion to the Office of Price Administration's antidiscrimination order which

Arnold Reported Choice for Place On District Bench

By the Associated Press

Informed sources said yesterday that Thurman W. Arnold has been selected for a place on the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia when and if the Senate confirms Wiley B. Rutledge, jr., as a member of the Supreme Court.

Arnold is Assistant Attorney General in charge of the antitrust division. Under his direction the division's activities have been greatly expanded.

Talk of Arnold's selection for a judgeship began around mid-December and intensified in the days immediately preceding President Roosevelt's nomination of Justice Rutledge on Monday. Responsible sources which cannot be further identified said yesterday he has definitely been selected.

Arnold is known to have been approached on previous occasions for places on the bench, but had avoided actual proffers of such nominations, since he preferred the more active life of an Assistant Attorney General. He is reported to be ready to accept a place on the Appeals Court here, however, as it would permit him to remain in Washington.

Peace Effort Is Promised By Music Czar

Petrillo Will Attempt To End Record Row; No Suspension Now

By the Associated Press

The prospect of an early lifting of a union ban against recorded music arose yesterday before a Senate committee with James C. Petrillo promising to undertake a settlement of his differences with radio broadcasters and recording companies.

The American Federation of Musicians' president agreed with Senator Clark (Democrat) of Idaho that the time had arrived to "talk business with these boys" and even conceded "they've got some justice on their side."

He flatly refused, however, to agree to a suspension of the ban pending negotiations, declaring:

"I've negotiated with these people locally and nationally for 20 years. If they are permitted to make records while the negotiations are going on, they'll make enough to last two or three years."

He was just as firm in his objection to a 30-day suspension, asserting "they could make enough records in that time to last a year," and would "not be interested in any quick agreement."

Petrillo said he would take the matter up with the executive council of his union; since it would have to approve formal demands upon the industry.

The gray-haired union leader made it clear that any agreement would have to provide for receipt by the union of royalties on all records sold and played and "more work for live musicians."

At one time, he stirred laughter when he said he had made "a mistake" in requiring Chicago radio stations to pay "pan cake turners" $90 a week just to change recordings on broadcasts.

He didn't believe the stations would agree to pay it, he said, but when they accepted the demands, "I couldn't turn them down."

9 Men Indicted In U. S. Fraud Case

Six indictments naming nine persons were returned at Harrisburg, Pa., yesterday, charging conspiracy to defraud, bribery, extortion and theft in the building of a naval supply depot at Mechanicsburg, Pa.

The indictments were announced by Attorney General Biddle early last month. Sidney Friendman, United States commissioner at Harrisburg, charged that the inquiry was being hamstrung by Washington officials, but the grand jury held his charges untrue.

Failed to Build Reserves

Lack of War-Vital Metals Largely Due to WPB, Ickes Says

Interior Secretary Ickes yesterday laid at the door of the War Production Board the major share of responsibility for failure of the Government to develop domestic reserves of such war-vital metals as manganese, aluminum, copper, zinc and chromium.

Ickes told the Senate Small Business Committee that while Interior Bureau experts who have devoted years to the study and utilization of the Nation's national resources, have attempted to "force" the increased production of metals, their effort usually "peters out, somehow" in WPB.

Ickes' battle with WPB and other agencies over development of metal resources was dragged into the open at the public hearing through a series of questions asked the Cabinet member by Senator Murray (Democrat) of Montana, committee chairman. The questions were pointed and the answers to them were detailed and documented with statistics, giving evidence that both questions and answers were prepared in advance.

In a written statement which Ickes read to the committee before the questions were asked, the Secretary pointedly suggested that businessmen in the WPB might have been responsible for the petering-out of projects for utilization of new sources and methods for producing more of the materials America needs for victory. He suggested, also, that a reason might

400 Planes Dump Deadly Loads on Lille, St. Omer And Abbeville

By Edward D. Ball
Associated Press Staff Writer

London, Jan. 13.—Large bomber forces and American and Allied fighters—nearly 400 in all—made one of the greatest series of daylight raids of the war today on occupied France and Holland.

The heaviest attack was delivered by Flying Fortresses which bored through swarms of German fighters to register many direct hits on industrial plants at Lille.

Three Fortresses were missing from the Lille attack and two R. A. F. fighters failed to return from Holland. Three enemy planes were shot down.

The Flying Fortresses and the R. A. F.'s newest and fastest light bombers shuttled across the Channel from noon until late afternoon to paste these targets:

Several Targets

Lille—High altitude attacks by the Fortresses on Nazi controlled industrial plants and railways were successful. It was the third heavy raid on Lille and the seventeenth bombing attack there since it was captured by the Nazis in 1940.

St. Omer—R. A. F. Boston Bombers scored many hits on the German-occupied airfield.

Abbeville—Vega bombers with an escort bombed the airfield from a low level.

Northern France — Mosquitoes bombed railway centers from low level and engine sheds and repair shops were hit.

Holland — Transportation and gun positions were blasted.

Fighter pilots who were out during the day included American, British, Canadian, New Zealand, Australian, Belgian, Norwegian, Polish and Fighting French.

The raids were carried out in bright sunshine and the Fortresses loosed their bombs from high altitudes on the industries of Lille, and on the railway yards there.

The day attacks followed a night assault by the British on the Ruhr Valley, the seventh in 10 nights on that important German area.

More than 100 American bombers struck Lille last October 9 in one of the greatest raids of the war and on December 6 Fortress and four-motored Liberator planes teamed up for a mighty assault on the Lille locomotive works and the enemy airfield at Abbeville.

Numerous Hits

"U. S. A. A. F. Flying Fortress B-17s made a high altitude attack upon industrial plants in Lille, France, which are engaged in war production for Germany," today's communique said.

"Visibility was good and numerous bursts were observed on the target and in railway yards.

The communique did not say how many German planes were shot down by the heavily armed Fortresses, which usually exact a big toll of enemy fighters, but announced three German fighters were destroyed in the covering operations of the many squadrons of Allied planes.

British Reveal Secret of Air Minesweeper

By Alfred E. Wall
Associated Press Staff Writer

London (Thursday), Jan. 14.—The Air Ministry released a 3-year-old secret today in telling how Wellington bombers helped clear the seas around Britain's coasts of the deadly German magnetic mines which once were Hitler's "secret weapon" and which threatened the supply lines to these islands in the last three months of 1939.

The story was told for the first time in "Coastal Command," a new booklet in the series on the British Air Force, the first of which was "Battle of Britain."

Magnetic Coil in Casing

The mine sweepers of the air were equipped with a "hoop-shaped casing extending all around them and secured to their nose, wings and tail." The casing held a magnetic coil and the current was supplied by an auxiliary engine of the ordinary Ford V-8 type.

The equipment was designed to set up a magnetic current which would set off the then new type of mine.

Unneeded After 4 Months

"Coastal Command" said that "when the mines exploded, the Wellingtons were severely jolted and their crews had no warning to brace themselves, for they could not know the moment when they would pass over a mine."

Mine sweeping from the air, it said, continued "some four months,

"SECRET WEAPON"—A Wellington bomber flies with a hooplike device which was a "secret weapon" adopted by the British early in the war for exploding magnetic mines from the air. Russians Pierce Stalingrad Ring, Take 12 Towns In Southeast

By Natalia Rene
International News Service Staff Writer

Moscow, Jan. 14 (Thursday).—An unchecked Soviet advance up the Baku-Rostov Railway in the north Caucasus bagged another 12 large towns Wednesday while massive German attempts to break into the Russian rear in the lower Don valley were crushed, it was announced today.

The midnight communique said the Russians had advanced 50 miles to Zhuravskoye from the Georgievsk-Mineralnye Vody area.

Forty miles to the north of Georgievsk, the town of Novo-Selskoye also was captured, indicating the width of the front in this area.

Southwest of Velikye Luki on the north central front, meanwhile, a counterattacking Nazi battalion was hurled into retreat with heavy losses, the communique said. The Russian command still refrained from confirming an earlier unofficial report that a Soviet column had advanced southeast of Velikye Luki to within 25 miles north of Smolensk.

Stalingrad Siege Ring Pierced

After piercing the German siege ring west of Stalingrad, a Red army unit solidified its new salient in the Volga city's western outskirts and killed at least 400 Nazis in repulsing enemy efforts to regain the lost ground and close the gap, it was announced. This brought to at least 1200 the 24-hour total of Germans slain in this action.

(The Axis admitted for the first time today that the 22 German-Rumanian divisions trapped near Stalingrad have been surrounded. The German-controlled Scandinavian telegraph bureau said, in a broadcast recorded by Reuter's News Agency, that "at Stalingrad, under cover of a heavy snowstorm, Russian shock troops are attempting to drive wedges into the encircled Axis zone."

(It has been reported that the trapped Axis forces consist of 20 German divisions and 2 Rumanian divisions—roughly 330,000 troops.)

(The German high command and the official Nazi news agency D. N. B. told of violent new Soviet onslaughts along the whole front from the Caucasus up to Leningrad. The Nazis said the Russians had launched two new offensives—one from Leningrad to the east against the German-held fortress of Schlusselberg designed to break the Leningrad siege, and the second in the Voronezh area of the upper Don, between Stalingrad and Moscow.

Nazis Admit Gains

(A. D. N. B. broadcast contained the admission that huge tank-led Soviet forces succeeded in crossing the Neva River south of Schlusselberg which lies on the lower shore of Lake Ladoga, 25 miles east of Leningrad. D. N. B. said the Russians "at one point" moved artillery across to the Neva's eastern bank with a violent air-supported assault. It said the Soviet "bridgehead" was under heavy German artillery fire and that the "fighting is still going on."

(D. N. B. also admitted that at the opposite end of the Russian front a Soviet tank formation north of the Terek River "succeeded in breaching the main German lines"

The Office of Price Administration yesterday specifically banned driving to the President's birthday ball celebrations this month in an interpretation of the ban on pleasure driving in the Eastern gasoline shortage area.

OPA said that driving to any place of amusement, even though the affair was for charity, was pleasure driving, and gave the President's balls as examples of the forbidden type of gasoline consumption.

Driving to a nearby restaurant to eat, however, was listed as one of the permissible types of trips. OPA also made it plain that an Eastern driver can make a non-

Hearings, Left Up To Local Boards, Not Begun Yet

Fifty-one motorists, 48 reported by the OPA and 3 by city police, were added yesterday to the list of alleged violators of the pleasure driving ban, bringing the total to 308 since the restriction went into effect last Thursday.

Although, it was pointed out that violations would increase unless action was taken soon, a local OPA official did not know when hearings would be held. He said it would be up to the individual boards to set the hearings.

It was understood, the OPA official said, that local boards had planned to give alleged violators private hearings and if they were found in violation of the ban, they would have to appear before a public hearing.

He didn't think a motorist's sugar and coffee books would be lifted as has been announced in other localities along the Eastern Coast.

Meanwhile OPA inspectors and city police were still on the alert for violators of the ban, centering their drive at roadway restaurants and places of amusement.

B-17s Wreck 34 Axis Planes In Libya Raid

By Wes Gallagher
Associated Press Staff Writer

Allied Headquarters in North Africa, Jan. 13.—American Flying Fortresses, destroying 34 Axis planes aground and aloft in a brilliant raid on Castel Benito airfield, 10 miles south of Tripoli, have torn a considerable hole in the thin air cover on which Field Marshal Rommel is depending for an effective retreat into Tunisia.

In this, the heaviest assault yet delivered from the west on the Axis in Tripolitania, not an American plane was lost, Allied headquarters announced today.

[The Paris radio, heard in London by Exchange Telegraph, reported tonight that American tanks, supported by the British First Army, have launched fierce attacks against Axis positions at three points in the central sector of Tunisia, according to the United Press.

[The attacks were made between Bou Arada and Goubellat—15 to 20 miles south of Medjez-El-Bab—at Pichon, 50 miles to the southeast, and at Fondouk, slightly southeast of Pichon, the broadcast said.]

The Fortresses' attack, delivered yesterday, topped other action in the North African theater, where

5 Admirals, 2 Generals Go On Retired List

By John G. Norris
Post Staff Writer

More than a score of ranking Navy and Marine Corps officers were placed on the retired list January 1 as the result of special physical examinations ordered by Secretary of the Navy Knox last fall, it was learned yesterday.

Heading the list of January 1 retirements was Vice Admiral Russell Willson, until recently deputy commander in chief of the United States Fleet. Four rear admirals, two Marine Corps generals, 14 captains of the Navy line and staff, and two Marine colonels were also retired.

The Navy confirmed the retirement of the officers but said a large number of them are being retained on duty and given such

James Roosevelt Wins Navy Cross For Makin Raid

Lieut. Col. James Roosevelt, eldest son of President and Mrs. Roosevelt, was among 15 members of a Marine Corps raider group announced by the Navy yesterday as having each received a Navy cross for a successful attack on Makin Island in the Pacific last August.

The decoration, the Navy said, was awarded to Roosevelt, then a major, by Admiral Chester W. Nimitz, commander in chief, Pacific Fleet, on Gaudalcanal Island in the Solomons last October.

Roosevelt's citation praised his "extraordinary heroism" to insure effective control of the raiding operations and credit him personally with saving three men from drowning in the heavy surf.

Lone Jap Plane Bombs Base on Guadalcanal

In their first attack in a month, a lone Japanese airplane bombed Henderson Field on Guadalcanal Island Monday, where United States forces have opened a "small scale" offensive, the Navy reported yesterday.

One American was killed and several wounded in the Japanese bombing. It was the first time since December, when a single Jap bomber also appeared, that American holdings on Guadalcanal had been attacked from the air.

All United States aircraft returned.

Text of Navy communique No. 230:

"1. On January 11, during the morning, an enemy plane dropped five bombs on United States positions in the area southwest of the airfield on Guadalcanal. Casualties were one killed and several wounded.

"2. On January 13 a force of 'Marauder' medium bombers Martin B-26) with 'Airacobra' (Bell P-39) and 'Lightning' (Lockheed P-38) escort bombed the Japanese airfield at Munda on New Georgia Island. No air opposition was encountered, but antiaircraft batteries were active. Results of the bombing were not reported. All United States planes returned.

"3. Small-scale offensive operations against enemy outposts on Guadalcanal are progressing satisfactorily and several small enemy positions have been isolated."

War Sidelights

Lieutenant Censors Own Code For Revealing Whereabouts

Detroit, Jan. 13 (AP).—Lieut. Joseph Timothy Scallen arranged with his father, Judge John P. Scallen of Detroit Record's Court, a simple but foolproof code before the son left for duty with the Army Medical Corps.

His letters, as he approached closer to the combat zone, didn't use the code for revealing his whereabouts, but in them he reminded his father, "I often think of and remember the plans we made."

Judge Scallen said today Joe's latest letter arrived from "somewhere in the Pacific," told how he had some new duties and that "it wouldn't be right to go through with our previous plans."

The envelope explained why. In one corner was the stamp and signature of the censor—Lieut. Joseph T. Scallen.

7 Die For Deat Attack

London, Jan. 13 (AP).—The Fighting French reported today that seven Frenchmen accused of an attempt on the life of Marcel Deat, Fascist editor and Collaborationist Party leader, had been executed at Tours by the Germans.

Landing Makes History

Somewhere in the South Pacific, Jan. 12 (Delayed), (AP).—The scout bomber pulled up to a stop on its carrier today, presumably ending just another routine mission, but as the pilot, Lieut. (jg) George A. Kiewet of San Diego, stepped to the deck, he was greeted with loud, long cheers.

Ordered below to clean up and report back to the deck, Kiewet was unaware he had made history. He soon was enlightened, however, for on his return topside he found the carrier's entire complement lined up to present him with a huge cake.

The gift commemorated the sixty-five thousandth landing made aboard the ship. It is believed to be the greatest number of deck landings ever made aboard a carrier of any navy.

Long Paratroop Raid

Santa Monica, Calif., Jan. 13 (AP). Lieut. Gen. Henry H. Arnold gave a vivid story of history's longest paratroop attack in a letter read to employes of the Douglas Aircraft Co.

He told how 44 Douglas C-47 transport planes whisked the paratroops 1500 miles from Great Britain to an airdrome 35 miles southwest of Tunis in North Africa—with no stopovers.

"No parachute attack in history has been made over more than a fraction of this distance," General Arnold wrote, adding, by contrast, that the Nazis had to fly only 85 miles from Greece to Crete.

"The dropping of troops had to be timed to the minute with the attacks made by bombers and fighters. Some of these planes, incidentally, had arrived only a short time before from America."

Chinese Recapture Sinyang, Important Japanese Base

By the Associated Press

Chungking, Jan. 13.—Sinyang, important Japanese base in southern Honan Province on the Peiping-Hankow trunk railway, has been recaptured by the Chinese, it was announced tonight.

The victory was considered the most significant in months in the central war theater.

The high command also reported recapture of Hwangchwan, east of Sinyang, in a battle in which 600 Japanese were slain.

It also reported renewed fighting in western Yunnan, near the Burma border, where the Japanese attacked Mengma January 8.

The communique said the Chinese attacked Sinyang on the evening of January 9 and at dawn next day one column penetrated the west gate.

"Up to the evening of January 10 more than 300 Japanese were killed in the city in addition to 200 in the suburbs," the communique added.

Construction Posts Record of 13 Billions

The Commerce Department reported Tuesday that new construction activity reached $13,600,000,000 in 1942, the highest on record, and exceeded the 1941 total by $2,500,000,000.

"Due to an almost insatiable demand for cantonments, air bases, ship ways, and other types of war construction, military and Navy construction also totaled five billion dollars in 1942, as compared with $2,100,000,000 a year earlier," the report said.

Much of Metal Shortage Held Due to WPB

"I believe that the technologists of the Nation are not as yet giving sufficient attention to certain processes and operations which, although small in size, would be highly efficient and highly competitive," Ickes charged.

"I have reached this conclusion because of the Department's unsuccessful efforts to obtain support for and acceptance by war agencies of some of its competitive processes. It may be that if we freed technology from the restrictions of interlocking corporate control and the ideology of monopoly, we would reap a harvest of new, highly efficient and self-contained medium and small-sized operations."

Ickes told of a "tremendous struggle by some of our large corporations to maintain a dominating position at all costs."

The Secretary apparently had Commerce Secretary Jesse Jones, chief of Federal war financing agencies, in mind when he said: "The banker's idea of security of investment and rate of return, whether for private banking houses or for the Government, can be made to obscure the Nation's need for domestic minerals supplies."

Ickes disclosed that the Bureau of Mines has "proved up" million of tons of needed ores. But, he said, "only a negligible percentage of the total, newly discovered mineral resources have so far been brought into production."

Instead of developing metals reserves, said the Secretary, American industry substantially has continued to import these raw materials from prewar overseas sources, despite shortage of ships and hazards of shipping.

Manganese Cited

Citing an instance, Ickes testified that the department presented a program for domestic manganese in the fall of 1941. By January, 1942, the program had developed to the point, he said, where all needed manganese could have been produced in this country, with the exception of importation of 130,000 tons from Cuba.

"We kept pressing for the adoption of the program we had worked out," Ickes said. "And in the summer of 1942 we thought we were getting somewhere when the War Production Board and the Reconstruction Finance Corp. started taking preliminary steps in setting up seven or eight projects called for in our program.

"Today most of these projects have fallen into the class of good intentions."

Ickes declared the department pressed "from the outset of the emergency" for utilization of aluminum-bearing clay and alunite to supplement domestic and imported bauxite as a raw material for aluminum. A single plant, with capacity of "only 100 tons per day" was the net result of the department's effort, he reported.

The Secretary testified that WPB support thus far has been lacking for a program which "will provide promptly an additional 50,000 tons of copper annually." Copper is close to the top of the list of short materials. Zinc is relatively even scarcer, but "active production of discovered reserves must await negotiation of loans (Jones' RFC), approval of priorities (WPB) and a host of other Government actions in relation to which the department has no control but occupies only a casual advisory position."

Sen. Clark's Bill Would Make Ruml Proposal Effective

By Cecil B. Dickson
Washington Bureau of Chicago Sun

The Treasury yesterday gave support to a bill by Senator Bennett C. Clark (Democrat), Missouri, for a new 19 per cent withholding tax to make effective the Ruml pay-as-you-go plan.

The Clark collection-at-the-source proposal would include the present 6 per cent normal and the 13 per cent surtax on the first bracket—from the first taxable dollar up to $2000—and would be in addition to the new 5 per cent victory tax now tapping pay envelopes of 50 million Americans.

Stanley S. Surrey, new tax legislative counsel of the Treasury, who will have an important part in presenting President Roosevelt's new 16-billion-dollar war revenue program to Congress, said yesterday:

"The Treasury has said for some time that the best method of placing the income tax on a current basis is through collection at the source.

On a Current Basis

"If such collection were made applicable at the normal (6 per cent) plus first bracket ($2000) surtax rate, the vast majority of our taxpayers would be placed on a current basis—about 25 million of the estimated 35 million income taxpayers. In addition, they would have their income taxes automatically budgeted for them."

With 50 millions subject to the victory tax and 35 millions subject to regular income taxes, he said, "income taxation is now on a shirt sleeve rather than a silk stocking basis."

"The case for collection at the source can be rested upon this inescapable fact alone," he added.

A Spendings Tax

Surrey disclosed that the Treasury would renew its proposal, rejected in 1942 by Congress, for a spending tax, as a part of the 16 billion dollar combination tax and enforced savings revenue bill. It will oppose a general sales tax, sponsored by Senator Robert A. Taft (Republican), Ohio, and Representative Willis Robertson (Democrat), Virginia. They are drafting a 10 per cent sales levy measure.

The Treasury, meantime, indicated it would oppose plans of Democratic and Republican leaders in Congress to jam through before March 15 a pay-as-you-go bill, based on the Ruml plan, and delay until around April 1, action on the 16 billion dollar program.

The Treasury, a spokesman said, wants to "shoot the works" at one time. Some fear that Congress, if it puts into a bill a pay-as-you-go plan that will call for 24 per cent withholding at the source—the Clark 19 and the Victory 5 per cent tax—would hesitate to tackle the job of rasing all of the 16 billion dollars.

Secretary Morgenthau, meantime, is fighting for the continued voluntary sale of War Bonds. He was reported to believe that around 10 billion dollars in bonds can be sold each war year despite a compulsory savings plan written into the revenue law.

More Power for Army, Navy To Fight Asked by Legion Unit

The American Legion's national defense committee recommended yesterday that the Army and Navy be given full authority on "where to fight, what with, and with how many, and how much."

Concluding a three-day conference, the committee also asked for compulsory arbitration as a means of ending strikes in war industry. Government spokesmen, the press and radio were urged to watch the utterances of commentators and analysts to forestall undue and premature optimism about the progress of the war.

Greater War Output

"War production should be increased by further sacrifices of comforts and luxuries by civilians, by working longer hours, by eliminating slowdowns and absenteeism, and by the prevention of strikes in defense industry by compulsory arbitration," the committee declared.

Saying that "our hearts are always with the men at the front," Warren Atherton of California, committee chairman, warned that "we know by experience that the road is not so short or easy as some may think. This was a meeting to improve and increase our share of the work."

High School Victory Corps

Emphasis was given to legion work by the high school Victory Corps to which the legion furnishes instructors. Universal military training was advocated, and continued Boy Scout training was urged.

The naval affairs subcommittee reported plans for recruiting men over 38 and under 50 for the construction battalions "Seabees" of the Navy, and cooperative efforts with the legion auxiliary on recruitment for the women's forces in the armed services. Universal finger printing was advocated.

Nazis Seize U. S. Nationals In France

By Wade Werner
Associated Press Staff Writer

Germany is trying to force the release of its captured armistice commission in North Africa—by seizing as hostages the American diplomats and other nationals in France.

The State Department disclosed this yesterday in announcing "the German government has now assumed complete jurisdiction over the American group and is taking them to Germany under guard of German SS troops."

The Americans—totaling about 140 diplomats, newspaper correspondents, Red Cross workers and others—were caught in France last November by the break of diplomatic relations with Vichy.

Proposal Frowned On

The department said its prompt proposal to exchange French officials held here for the American group detained in France had met with an unfavorable response.

"The answer as reported by the Swiss government," acting as a neutral intermediary, the announcement explained, "was that no consideration would be given to the departure of the American officials from France until information was furnished about the German armistice commission in Africa and the German consul in Algiers.

"The requested information is being gathered for transmission through the customary channels. However, the American Government does not consider that this information about German nationals has any relation to the question of the exchange of French and American personnel."

Details Lacking

It was not specified whether the unfavorable response had come directly from the German government through the Swiss or from the Vichy government.

That Vichy was acting as Berlin's mouthpiece was a natural assumption, but it became more obvious when the Germans last week posted a guard of SS troops around the Americans interned at Lourdes, France, and made preparations to transport them to Germany.

The United States has interned at Hershey, Pa., some of the French officials formerly assigned to the embassy in Washington or to consular posts. Others technically liable to internment were left at liberty when the break came with Vichy, and still others were released after brief internment at Hershey. The latter, the State Department disclosed, "have offered their services in the military effort of the United Nations against the Axis."

Tubeless Tire Offers Little Aid

The tubeless tire apparently offers little or no help for the present rubber emergency, but the principle seems feasible and practical for the future, the transportation committee of the Petroleum Industry War Council reported yesterday after a month's operating road tests by oil companies on more than 1000 tires in all parts of the country.

William R. Boyd, jr., council chairman, announced that the committee believes the idea "has large potentialities for rubber conservation," and the proponents, James B. McGay and V. F. Barnett of Tulsa, Okla., "have made a real contribution to the future conservation of rubber."

It was disclosed that most of the new tires and tires in A-1 condition were operated successfully without tubes, but that older and poorer tires used failed in many of the tests.

Hog Prices Set 22-Year January Mark

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Jan. 13.—Hog prices advanced 5 to 15 cents a hundred pounds today to the highest point reached in any January since 1920 amid growing reports that black markets in meat were holding down hog shipments to organized slaughtering centers.

A small number of offerings, about 25 per cent less than expected, provided the main stimulus in the upturn, traders said. Buyers paid a top of $15.10 a hundred pounds for choice hogs, and most prices were within a $14.85 to $15 range.

The top quotation was only 65 cents under the 22-year peak for any month established in October, 1942. A year ago the top price was $11.50, two years ago $8.10 and back in the depression year of 1933 it was $3.25.

The National Independent Meat Packers' Association, in a telegram to the Office of Price Administration, declared "an extensive and Nation-wide black market exists with enormous unlawful slaughter of animals."

Earlier this week Carl H. Neu, associate marketing specialist in charge of the agricultural marketing in Cleveland, asserted "thousands of mushroom slaughter houses have sprung up in barns, garages, basements and even in the open fields under the limb of a big tree."

Livestock men pointed out that the 1942 spring pig crop was 25 per cent larger than in 1941, and these pigs should have been coming to market in the past few months. However, from October 1, 1942, to January 8, 1943, inspected slaughter at 27 markets was only 8 per cent ahead of the preceding year.

Capital Gets Oil Supply For Few Days.

forbids dealers to refuse to honor any fuel oil coupons.

Under the new order, no dealer or consumer subject to the limitation may accept additional petroleum supplies when they have on hand a ten-day supply.

No estimate was available of how much oil was received here yesterday. However, one dealer said his firm got 150,000 gallons and he believed another company received the like amount. Other dealers were reluctant to reveal how much they obtained.

"Nothing Accomplished"

On Capitol Hill, Lester Scott, representative of 42 local oil dealers, told the Senate committee that Washington's fuel oil program faced disaster and that nothing has been accomplished here by the OPA to ease the situation.

Scott, head of the oil section of the Merchants and Manufacturers Association, termed the anti-discrimination order as ineffective and asked that dealers and suppliers be permitted to use discretion in alloting available fuel oil.

He recommended that all fuel oil coming into Washington, either by barge or train, be pooled at terminals and distributed equally to all dealers.

He also recommended more coordinated control of the problem under one agency with greater power instead of the three agencies now handling it.

Modification Asked

Scott asked for a modification of the rationing regulations which would improve the efficiency of deliveries, stating the crux of the problem was getting the oil to the consumers as quickly as possible.

He explained to the committee, headed by Senator Maloney (Democrat) of Connecticut, that as far as the anti-discrimination order was concerned "it actually results in more discrimination."

In asking for more coordinated control under one agency, he said, this agency could have charge of supply, rationing, and transportation of fuel oil. At present the Petroleum Administration for War is handling the supply; Office of Price Administration is in charge of rationing and the Office of Defense Transportation has control of transportation.

Questioned on how best to get one agency to handle the three phases of control, Scott replied, "get representatives of all three branches and the oil dealers together and work out some constructive program."

Before closing the inquiry, Senator Maloney's committee asked Scott to draw up a brief, stating specifically what the fuel oil dealers wanted done, and submit the brief to the committee.

Senator Maloney adjourned the hearing indenitely, but will schedule another in the near future.

OPA Bans Driving to President's Ball

essential stop of any kind if it is on the route of an essential trip. For instance, a person driving home from work could stop for a drink or a social visit so long as the stop takes no extra gasoline.

OPA issued a two-paragraph statement on driving to restaurants and places of entertainment and also issued a series of questions and answers explaining the application of the ruling to specific instances.

The interpretation said:

"If no alternative means of transportation are available, driving to a resturant for the purpose of eating a meal, if eating at a restaurant is necessary, is 'essential shopping' (essential shopping is one of the purposes for which Easterners may use their cars) if the restaurant is within reasonable distance from driver's home, or place of work, or reasonable distance from direct route between home and work.

"Driving to dances, balls, theaters or other places of amusement or entertainment is pleasure driving under restrictions of this amendment, even though such functions are held for the purpose of raising funds for charity."

OPA's list of questions and answers:

"Q. My wife and I work in downtown offices and drive to and from work together. May we stop at a drive-in restaurant where we usually eat on our way home for dinner?

"A. Yes.

"Q. There are no cooking facilities in the apartment which my wife and I rent. May we drive to a restaurant for dinner?

"A. Yes, if there is no public conveyance to the place, and transportation is necessary.

"Q. How about taking in a movie before driving back home?

"A. Only if no extra driving is involved.

"Q. On the way home from work I drive past a restaurant that offers a floor show. Will it be in violation of the rules on pleasure driving for me to stop there for dinner?

"A. No pleasure driving is involved.

"Q. In order for my wife and me to go out for an evening's fun of dining and dancing it is necessary for me to drive our two small children to my mother-in-law's. She keeps them and we make the rest of the trip by trolley. Is it right to drive for this purpose?

"A. No, it's a pleasure trip.

"Q. Is it all right for my wife to drive the children to her mother's while shopping for the week's groceries?

"A. Yes, this is an essential shopping trip.

"Q. Our lodge is having a benefit supper. Can I tell the folks they can come in their cars?

A. No. But if they are passing on an essential trip they could stop for the meal.

"Q. My sorority has scheduled a dinner at an out-of-town country club to raise funds for a local charity. Since there is no public transportation to this place, can guests drive their cars?

"A. Sorry, but we are too short of gas, and during the emergency car trips to social functions even for charity must be regarded as pleasure driving.

"Q. May I drive to the President's birthday ball?

"A. No."

Slight Hope Seen of Relaxing Driving Ban

By the Associated Press

An Office of Price Administration official told a special Senate committee yesterday that OPA was trying to simplify gasoline rationing, but he offered Eastern States only slight hope of a return to pleasure driving.

Charles S. Phillips, chief of the Automotive Supplies Division, said it might be possible to relax the ban on pleasure driving after the winter heating crisis which strains transportation for the shipment of fuel oil, and estimated the remainder of this emergency period at 65 to 70 days.

But when Senator Burton (Republican of Ohio) said, "You don't want to give the impression that after 70 days the ban on pleasure driving will be definitely called off," Phillips replied, "I certainly don't," adding: "Maybe Mr. Ickes will tell us we'll have to keep the ban on after that."

He said OPA was attempting to (1) simplify the rationing forms now in use, (2) provide a mail procedure so rationees would not have to appear personally before local boards so often, and (3) simplify the regulations.

OPA, Phillips said, was attempting to place the whole country on average rations of 5000 miles a year for passenger cars, which should assure tires under the rubber program for essential operation of cars for at least 24 months.

The gasoline shortage in the 17 Eastern States and the District of Columbia, where the prohibition on pleasure driving applies, has reduced the average mileage to less than 5000, he said, while local boards in other parts of the country are "tailoring" the "B" and "C" books they have issued to bring the average down to 5000 miles.

Phillips in his testimony before the committee reported that inspectors from his office had found two "relatively small" black markets in gasoline without stating where they were. He added that the public on the East Coast is simplifying enforcement of the antipleasure-driving order by cooperating "very well."

Frances Farmer Jailed—But Cop's Ears Are Burning

Santa Monica, Calif., Jan. 13 (AP). Frances Farmer, blond movie actress, was jailed again today but not—the arresting detective said—before his ears were burning.

Detective Earl Reinbold reported that, accompanied by a policewoman, he went to a hotel seeking the actress on a warrant charging probation violation.

They found her, but Reinbold said she asked to be allowed to take a bath. Finally, he knocked on the bath-room door.

It was flung open, he continued, and Miss Farmer, scantily clad, delivered a tirade.

She was lodged in city jail and ordered to appear in police court tomorrow on a warrant, growing out of a recent drunk driving arrest.

American Ship Sunk In Indian Ocean

Unified Command

Army, Navy Fight U-Boats Off Trinidad

By Robert N. Sturdevant
Associated Press Staff Writer

Port of Spain, Trinidad, Dec. 31 (Delayed)—American Naval counterblows have made enemy submarine operations in this U-boat "hot spot" of the Western Hemisphere increasingly hazardous, but it is a continuing battle and much remains to be done.

This is the opinion of Rear Admiral J. B. Olendorf, commanding the Trinidad sector of the Caribbean Sea frontier.

"This has been one of the hottest spots for subs in the whole Western Hemisphere," the Admiral said. "But for the last couple of months it has been relatively quiet. It isn't because we've licked the submarines, but they have moved elsewhere, probably operating on shorter lines along the African coast waiting for the ships to come to them.

Got in Destroyer Deal

The Port of Spain base is one of the Caribbean bastions acquired on a 99-year lease from the British in the famous 50-destroyer deal of 1941. At that time the Navy obtained 12 square miles on the harbor where since has risen a sizable naval operating base.

There is also an Army establishment here under the command of Maj. Gen. H. C. Pratt, charged with the defense of the island of Trinidad and other parts of the sector including St. Lucia and Antigua.

General Pratt and Admiral Olendorf call themselves the "service twins" and they take pride in the cooperation which exists between them.

"If people want to," Admiral Olendorf said "they can make any kind of a command work."

Olendorf commands both Army and Navy aircraft in any operations exclusive of an attack on the base and island. In that event the command goes to General Pratt.

Harbor Well Protected

The Navy is charged with the supply, repair and support of forces based on this area. It also directs British naval craft for local defense, under the command of Commodore Phillip A. Phillips of the Royal Navy.

The picturesque harbor of Port of Spain, surrounded by the green highlands of Trinidad proper and numbers of small islands, is exceedingly well-protected and possesses tremendous anchorage facilities.

Currently the Navy employs between 7000 and 8000 native laborers in addition to some American skilled workmen. At one time both the Army and Navy had more than 20,000 working on their establishments. And the work still goes on.

Survivor of Nazi Sub Torpedoing Reaches New York

The Navy reported yesterday that a survivor from a medium-sized United States merchant vessel torpedoed and sunk by an enemy submarine late in September in the Indian Ocean has arrived in New York.

Senator Walsh (Democrat), of Massachusetts, said, meanwhile, in describing the seriousness of the fuel oil shortage in the East that the German radio had reported the recent sinking of 13 tankers in a convoy across the Atlantic.

Elmer Davis, head of the Office of War Information later said the report was "not true." The convoy was attacked, he said, but no such losses as the Germans claimed were inflicted.

British Cargo Ship Sunk in Indian Ocean

Norfolk, Va., Jan. 13 (AP).—Striking a small British cargo ship in the Indian Ocean in late October, enemy torpedoes caused the forward half of the vessel to break away and sink, leaving the undamaged stern afloat, survivors related here.

The ship's third officer said the crew was in a lifeboat, "debating whether or not to go back aboard the stern and try to bring her in, when Jerry settled the question for us with another torpedo."

Nazis Turning Out Subs at Fast Rate

By the Associated Press

The German navy, it was learned on high authority yesterday, is turning out submarines faster than the sea and air forces of the United Nations can destroy them. This despite the heavy bombing of German factories from British and American bases in England.

At the same time, the United Nations are building cargo and transport ships faster than they are being sunk. They also are building escort and patrol vessels—destroyers, corvettes and subchasers—at about top speed.

The number of enemy submarines operating in the Atlantic at any one time is more than 100, which represents possibly from one-third to one-fourth of their actual sub strength. The rest of their undersea craft are either operating in other waters or are at home for repairs and crew relief.

These were described by qualified authorities, who cannot be identified by name, as being among the reasons why the U-boat is considered by the Navy to be, in the words of Admiral Harold R. Stark, its "first enemy." They are reasons, too, why United Nations shipping losses still are, in Stark's opinion, "something to be mighty uncomfortable about."

Quarantine Lifted

Harrisburg, Pa., Jan. 13 (AP).—The State Health Department today lifted a general smallpox quarantine that has been in effect in the Kishacoquillas Valley of Mifflin County since the disease developed among Amish farmers there more than three weeks ago.

Perjurer Slugs Federal Witness After Conviction

New York, Jan. 13 (AP).—A few minutes after he had been sentenced in Federal court to 18 months' imprisonment for perjury, Allan Keeler, 40, today assaulted Conrad Ouer, 56, a Government witness.

As United States deputy marshals and Keeler waited for an elevator in the corridor outside the Federal courtroom, Ouer walked out. Keeler lunged at him and landed a punch on Ouer's jaw.

Keeler, Queens automobile mechanic, was convicted of perjury before a Federal grand jury which had been investigating the whereabouts of Edward James Smythe, indicted with 27 others in Washington on charges of sedition. Keeler had denied seeing Smythe when Smythe was a fugitive from justice, but Ouer and Grace Penn, 48, testified Keeler had visited Smythe several times in August, 1942.

Both Ouer and Miss Penn pleaded guilty to harboring a fugitive and received suspended sentences.

Probe of Army Retail Group Asks Post Exchanges

New York, Jan. 13 (AP).—The National Association of Retail Secretaries adopted today a resolution asking the National Administration and Congress to investigate post exchanges and canteens in Army camps to check the alleged practice of selling merchandise to civilians who have no connection with the war effort.

The retail secretaries are meeting in conjunction with the wartime conference of the National Dry Goods Association in New York City with William G. Austin of Kansas City presiding.

The resolution indicated that retail stores in various parts of the country had reported recent encroachments upon their business by the Army camp stores.

The resolution said that retail business desired to have assurances that the normal practices of selling dry goods and other commodities would return after the war.

Controlled Troop Release Is Advocated

By the Associated Press

Boston, Jan. 13.—Men in the armed services would be retained in the services after the war for retraining in civilian pursuits and then be mustered out at a controlled rate under a plan advocated today by Dr. Joseph W. Barker, special assistant to the Secretary of the Navy.

Release of approximately 10 million men at step-rate intervals would tend to prevent dislocations to the Nation's economic machinery, he told the Northeastern University convocation in a prepared address.

Declaring that when men are called from civilian life into the armed services they are reeducated for their duties in the Army, Navy, Air Forces, Marine or Coast Guard, Dr. Barker added:

"Why should not these vast training establishments be reversed in flow, taking in the soldier and sailor and turning out the civilian through a program of instruction and training dedicated and adjusted to making him better fitted to take a useful place in a postwar economy?"

Dr. Barker, who is also dean of the faculty of engineering at Columbia University, asserted new industries would arise from wartime developments, and said:

"The mustered out soldier or sailor may well have to be trained for these newer applications. Even should he return to his old job he will have lost some of his civilian skills and he should be retrained therefor. In many cases he may not have developed civilian skills before he was called to active duty . . ."

District Sailor Saved Himself As Hornet Sank

Robert Arthur Jones, 22, of 4220 Barker Street Southeast, was among the crew aboard the carrier Hornet when it was crippled under Japanese fire last October, The Post learned yesterday.

JONES

Jones saw his first active duty aboard the carrier when it was commissioned in October, 1941, and served on the vessel until the attack a year later.

Jones now carries with him a singed piece of parachute taken from a Jap pilot whose plane crashed on the ship, a piece of fuselage and a particularly vivid picture of the two-day attack, which he revealed to his family while on furlough here last month. Jones is the son of Mrs. Alfred B. Pierotte of the Barker Street address and a nephew of Woodrow Browne of 1228 Raum Street Northeast.

Mrs. Pierotte yesterday proudly told The Post of her son's participation in the sea battle. A yeoman first class, he was stationed on the captain's bridge during the barrage and relayed orders to the men at their battle stations. Later he was among those who dumped the remaining ammunition overboard to prevent explosion. In describing the abandoning of the vessel as her son related it to her, Mrs. Pierotte was especially amused at the comment Jones, who was swimming to safety toward a destroyer, flung to the men who asked him to come on their raft: "No thanks . . . you aren't going fast enough for me." But he had been in no hurry to leave the ship until the orders to abandon ship were given, she assured The Post.

Always interested in the Navy, Jones wanted to enlist for service after graduation from Eastern High School in 1938, but his family did not give their consent until June, 1940. After "boot" training, he attended the clerical school at Norfolk Naval Base and graduated as honor man in his class in April, 1941. He worked in offices on the base until he was selected for service on the Hornet.

When he left Washington after Christmas, Jones went to Chicago to marry the former Mary Sullivan, who is now with him at Seattle, Wash.

But he doesn't want to stay there too long. Eager to renew his service at sea, Jones told his family, "I've left a lot of buddies out there and I want to be with them again."

3 D. C. Men, 455 Others Receive Air Medals in Middle East Area

Three Washington men were among 458 flying officers and men who were awarded decorations yesterday by Brig. Gen. Patrick Timberlake, chief of the American Bomber Command in the Middle East, an Associated Press dispatch from Cairo announced yesterday.

Sergt. Cecchini

Air medals were awarded the three men of the Ninth Air Force "in recognition of meritorious achievement while participating in aerial flight—all having participated in 100 hours of operational flight against the enemy."

The son of Nicola Cecchini, 52 H Street Northeast, and the late Mrs. Cecchini he was graduated from Eastern High School. He has been overseas for the last six months, according to relatives and was with National Savings & Trust Co. here before entering the Army.

The two other men listed from Washington were: Master Sergt. Frederick W. Blanchard and Technical Sergt. George P. Danenhauer.

The air medal also was awarded to Staff Sergt. James King, Radford, Va., crew member of a heavy bomber which destroyed a surface ship in Bengasi Harbor September 21.

An air medal also was awarded John B. Holst, Langley Field, Va.

Army Show Troupes Add Hostesses

Something new will be added to the shows given by volunteer entertainers from Washington in nearby Army camps this weekend when hostesses—whose duties will not be merely to act gracious but to "take care of the actors and assist back stage"—also accompany the troupes for the first time.

The hostesses received their first assignments and were told their duties yesterday by Mrs. Mary Davis of the District Recreation Department at a luncheon at the Green Parrot Tea Room. Their role is an innovation with Volunteer Camp Shows, which were taken over recently by the Recreation Department. The shows are now operated by the department under Recreation Services, Inc., and financed by the Community War Fund.

Mrs. George Garrett represented the District Recreation Board at the luncheon and Miss Sybil Baker the recreation department. Prospective hostesses present were Mrs. Joseph L. Miller, chairman of the committee; Mrs. John Kennedy, Mrs. James Landis, Mrs. Dan Partridge, jr., Miss Eleanor Powell, Mrs. Clement Randle, Mrs. Esther Stonestreet and Mrs. Francis Egan. Others who will assist are Mrs. Maud Howell Smith, Mary Mason, Mrs. J. H. Grace, Meredith Howard, and Mrs. Floyd A. Stephenson.

Bridges Says Flynn Had Jap Connection

Accusation Based on 'Wanton Falsehood,' Declares National Democratic Chairman

By Robert De Vore
Post Staff Writer

Senator Bridges (Republican) of New Hampshire yesterday called reporters into his office in the Senate Office Building and announced that on the Senate floor today he will accuse Edward J. Flynn, President Roosevelt's nominee to be Minister to Australia, of being associated, through his law firm, with a man who "had large Japanese interests" during the year preceding Pearl Harbor.

In a mimeographed statement, Bridges declared that the association is "one of international import that has a direct bearing on anyone who represents us in this international crisis in which we are involved in war with Japan."

"Falsehood," Says Flynn

A short time after Bridges made the charge, one of four which he said would be formally submitted to the Senate, Flynn declared the accusations were based on "wanton falsehood" and, said Flynn, "typical" of Bridges, who "always" goes in for "character assassination."

Bridges said Flynn "represented" the man who, "at the time of his retainer with Flynn," had "large Japanese interests" and who "was closely associated" with another man whom Bridges identified as "a registered agent of the Japanese government." The Japanese agent, asserted Bridges, "was in this country until two weeks before Pearl Harbor."

Bridges called for a committee hearing "open and public all along the line." As the press conference proceeded, it developed that the Senator believed it would be a good idea to summon as witnesses not only New York Mayor Fiorello LaGuardia and other New York officials to testify on Flynn's activities but also Secretary of State Cordell Hull, Undersecretary Sumner Welles and Assistant Secretary Adolf A. Berle.

Other Charges Aired

The other charges made by Bridges have been repeatedly aired during the career of Flynn, who is chairman of the Democratic National Committee.

The charges were:

That Flynn, as chancellor of the City of New York, "invested" public funds in a mortgage company for which Flynn's law firm subsequently became legal counsel, and that Monroe Goldwater, Flynn's law partner, served as a director of the company. The charge attributed to Berle the statement that the firm "received more money from the city than any similar company during Flynn's incumbency."

That Flynn made the late Dutch Schultz, notorious gangster, a deputy sheriff when Flynn was Bronx County sheriff.

The Paving Blocks Deal

That the grand jury investigation of the "scandal" of the Belgian paving blocks which Flynn was accused of having transported to his Lake Mahopac (N. Y.) estate and laid in his garden at the expense of the city, "was conducted by a political stooge of Flynn's and was improperly conducted to the disgust of at least one member of the grand jury." The grand juror, said Bridges, will appear before the committee "to tell why Flynn was exonerated."

Bridges incorporated in his last charge the accusation that the grand jury foreman, "Mr. Daniel Daly, received a Federal appointment two months after the Flynn whitewash."

Flynn's Stand

"These charges will be met and met completely by me at a hearing before the Foreign Relations Committee," said Flynn in his reply to Bridges.

"I am sure that when the testimony is all in, any fair-minded man will see that the charges not only do not bear any weight, but that the wanton falsehood, implicit in his announcement, will be definitely nailed. I do not expect Senator Bridges to be among the class of men capable of weighing plain evidence as against malicious detraction because of his violent dislike of the Administration and his desire to embarrass it in every way possible, and also because his Republicanism is so deep-rooted that it does not admit fairness.

"These attacks are typical of Senator Bridges' activities as revealed in his assailing the President and the President's family. He is always one to go in for character assassination and never has been particular whether there was any foundation for his scolding."

High Naval Officers Put on Retired List

assignments in the defense effort as they are physically capable of holding. Some will continue in their present jobs.

Several months ago, Secretary Knox ordered that all Navy and Marine Corps officers over the age of 58 be given special examinations to assure that the men holding top jobs afloat or ashore are fully capable physically of meeting the strain of modern war.

Most if not all of the ranking officers retired January 1 failed to pass this special rigid examination, it is understood.

At the same time, the Navy admitted that special new physical exams have been ordered for all officers over 56, to further weed out any commanders who are below par physically.

A Navy spokesman disclosed that Admiral Willson was recently relieved as deputy commander to Admiral Ernest J. King, Fleet commander in chief. He is continuing on duty as a member of the Joint Strategic Survey Committee, an agency under the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

The other top-ranking officers retired were:

Rear Admiral Albert T. Church, director of the Engineering Experimental Station, Annapolis, Md. He will be continued in that post, it was said.

Rear Admiral Ralston S. Holmes, until recently commandant of the Naval Operating Base, San Diego, Calif., and the Eleventh Naval District. He is continuing on duty in another post as liaison officer with the national defense committee of the California Institute of Technology.

Rear Admiral Andrew C. Pickens, former chief of staff to the commander in chief, United States fleet, who was assigned several months ago to be a member of the Navy Department Board of Awards. He will continue on duty with that board.

Two Marine Generals

Rear Admiral Stanford C. Hooper, who remains as general consultant for communications and radio, Office of Naval Materiel, Third Naval District, New York.

Brig. Gen. Edward A. Ostermann, adjutant and inspector of the Marine Corps, who will be promoted to major general and leave active service.

Brig. Gen. Samuel M. Harrington, who will continue as director of the Marine Corps Schools, Quantico, Va.

The Navy captains retired, many of whom are remaining in uniform in some capacity, were:

Capts. Guy E. Davis, Philip G. Lauman and Herbert B. Riebe of the Line; Robert E. Stoops, John L. Neilson, Montgomery E. Higgins, Gardner E. Robertson, William A. Angwin, George C. Rhoades, Abraham H. Allen, Robert E. Hoyt and Andrew B. Davidson of the Medical Corps; John V. McAlpin of the Dental Corps; Dallas B. Wainwright, jr., of the Supply Corps.

The two Marine colonels who were retired were Col. Paul A. Capron and Sydney S. Lee. Both are remaining in uniform.

5 Put Under Bond In Lynching Case

Hattiesburg, Miss., Jan. 13 (AP).—Five men, including a deputy sheriff-jailer, were released under $1500 bond each, following their arraignment before U. S. Commissioner W. E. Estes here late today on charges of violating civil liberties in connection with the lynching of a Negro at Laurel last October.

The men were Luther Holder, Jones County deputy sheriff-jailer; William Oscar Johnson, a farmer; Nathaniel Shotts, employe of a wholesale firm; Allen Pryor, and Barney Jones, employes of a manufacturing plant. All pleaded innocent.

Rescued Sailor Tells How to Scare Sharks

Astoria, Oreg., Jan. 13 (AP).—If a shark annoys you, poke him in the eye.

That's the advice of Clarence D. Master, merchant seaman whose ship was torpedoed 400 miles off the coast of Africa.

During the 22 hours he was in the water clinging to a hatch cover, he reported, he was repeatedly attacked by sharks. Once a 12-foot shark slashed at him but was driven off by a smaller blue shark. The newcomer clamped his jaws on Master's leg.

"He let go," the sailor said, "when I gouged my thumb into his eye."

jobs. It is understood that McNutt is under strong pressure from such States as New York where the Democratic State organization met defeat in the past election and has men out of jobs.

McNutt has tangled with Senators on two cases. Only three names were sent down in the last days of the previous session of Congress and one was held up because of objections from a Senator whose term was expiring. Monday, McNutt sent down an additional list of 30 names, including the appointment that was held up, but failed to send down the name of another person because of senatorial objections voiced informally.

Julius Cohen, former legislative representative of the Governor of West Virginia failed to secure confirmation as a principal attorney on McNutt's staff at $5600 a year when retiring Senator Rozier (Democrat), of West Virginia, voiced objection, killing the nomination in committee. His nomination has been resubmitted with the expectation that Senator Kilgore (Democrat), of West Virginia, will ask to have it approved. However, some objection is expected from new Republican Senator Revercomb of West Virginia, and the final outcome is regarded as uncertain.

The nomination of Russell McCarthy to be area director of Rochester, N. Y., was never sent to the Senate after Senator Mead (Democrat) of New York raised questions concerning him. McCarthy has been head of the Rochester office of the United States Employment Service at $4000 a year, and the new appointment would amount to a promotion.

Mead was reported to be bringing pressure to bear on McNutt to appoint New Yorkers who have been "regular" as for as the New York State Democratic organization and Tammany Hall in New York State and City Democratic organizations are concerned.

While the Senate ponders the new batch of nominations, key manpower jobs are going vacant with the starting of many new labor control activities indefinitely delayed. The appointments included area directors for Chicago, Indianapolis, Cleveland, Youngstown, Louisville, Denver, Syracuse and Albany, N. Y., and Omaha.

Other appointments included a number of labor utilization analysts, field supervisors, employment specialists, and program control technicians. Failure to get speedy action on the labor utilization jobs is regarded as a critical problem as steps cannot be taken to check on employment practices now followed by most war contractors without them.

Army Bomber Crashes Near New Ford Plant

Detroit, Jan. 13 (AP).—An all-metal low-winged plane, believed to be an AT-6 dive-bomber, crashed near the Ford Willow Run bomber plant tonight, killing two men.

Army authorities and State police were investigating the crash.

Owners Seek To Sell Cars Due to Ban

The ban on pleasure driving has brought a flood of used cars into the market, a survey of dealers in second-hand vehicles showed yesterday.

The majority contacted by The Post said that the numbers of persons coming in and telephoning to offer their cars for sale had more than doubled in the past week over previous weeks.

Beyond that, they reported an almost complete elimination of service customers.

Arcade Pontiac Co., 1437 Irving Street, Northwest, reported three times as many cars offered them as in past weeks.

"We bought 10 cars," a spokesman there said. "We normally buy about two a week. We've bought as many as we can handle. But the calls are still coming in."

E. M. Wallace, assistant manager, of Lee D. Butler & Co., 1121 Twenty-first Street Northwest, said: "They're coming in and phoning all the time. I've had about 50 or 75 offers of cars, all kinds of cars, some as recent as 1941 models and some old.' Previously, he said, the firm averaged about six offers a week.

"But we haven't bought any," he said. "We have all we want right now."

C. R. Marvin, salesmanger of Peake Motor Co., 4503 Wisconsin Avenue Northwest, said about twice as many people were trying to sell as usual.

Unrest in Camp For Japanese Evacuees

Not all of the recurrent troubles with interned Japs in Western camps have leaked into the newspapers.

One hot spot has been the Tule Lake camp in northern California, where there was a near riot several months ago. Jap evacuees, put to work on nearby truck farms, went on strike and threatened bodily harm to any of their comrades who did not join in the walkout.

To prevent bloodshed, the War Relocation Authority told the evacuees that they could return to camp and pick other jobs for their $16-a-month wage plus food and housing.

Since then, WRA officials have been keeping a weather eye on the Lake Tule camp, for it includes some bad agitators among both the "Issei" (Japanese-born) and the "Kibei" (American-born Japs educated in Japan).

A favorite method of spreading dissension and unrest among loyal Jap evacuees, chiefly the "Nesei" (American born and United States citizens), is to tell them that they get the same treatment in detention camps as the "Issei" and "Kibei" evacuees, despite their loyalty to the United States.

There have been several cases where "Nesei" evacuees who refused to renounce the United States and cooperated wholeheartedly with camp supervisors were beaten by the "Kibei." Another device of the agitators is to put up signs during the night proclaiming such Axis catch-phrases as: "Anybody who remains loyal to the United States is a fool . . . Don't work for an Allied victory . . . Japan will win."

At Granada, Colo., a sit-down strike of evacuees, who refused to haul coal in WRA trucks from Lamar, Colo., was broken up when camp officials, unable to get outside labor, served notice that the evacuees either would haul the coal—or freeze.

However, the Government doesn't always have to get tough. Sometimes loyal Jap evacuees take matters into their own hands. A "Nesei" cook in the Heart Mountain, Wyo., detention camp became so infuriated at a young pro-Axis agitator, who refused to work in the camp mess hall, that he went after him with a meat cleaver.

The cleaver sliced a board, which the agitator used as a shield, as neatly as a piece of kindling. The would-be victim apparently was in disfavor with the majority of his comrades in the camp, for an evacuee council voted unanimously to clear the cook of assault charges.

Silver Beer Cans

SHORTAGE of tin has given rise to experiments in substitutes, of which the most unusual, made in the laboratories of the Bureau of Standards, is the use of silver in making cans.

The experiment was made at the request of a beer company, which hoped to prove that silver could be used instead of tin, and without greater cost. The experiment was successful.

Thus U. S. beer drinkers may buy their beer in silver-plated cans—after the war. For steel is the principal factor in making cans, and none can be spared during the war.

Meanwhile, there's great demand for industrial use of silver for war purposes. Radio coils, contact points, brazing alloys, recoil mechanisms—there are dozens of vital uses for silver. But stocks of silver are still held idle by the Government because of the dog-in-the-manger obstruction of the "silver Senators."

Senator Green of Rhode Island has a bill before Congress to release U. S. silver stocks for war purposes. He believes growing public demand will force the silver bloc to retreat.

Army Ingenuity

Some wondrous tales have been told about the ingenuity of our Army, but the story of how a water shortage was averted at Fort Douglas, Utah, tops anything on the home front—and not even the War Department has been let in on the secret.

Fort Douglas, located in high, arid country, depends on a reservoir in Red Butte Canyon for its water. Recently the reservoir had receded to a point where a diversion job had to be done, and done quickly. However, an Army engineer sent from Washington refused to approve the project.

The engineer took one look at a sprinkling system in operation on a small golf course and decided that if there was water for this, the fort was not in danger. Other officers argued in vain that the golf course served as a fire break and would dry up unless constantly sprinkled.

The engineer took the next train back to Washington, convinced that a diversion job wasn't needed, despite a last-minute frantic plea by the fort's commanding officer that "we'll have to double our water supply or move." It looked for a while as if the c. o.'s worst fears might be realized, but then one of his assistants got a bright idea.

"There's a law in Utah against hunting beavers," he said. "But the law doesn't say anything about transplanting the beavers."

The commanding officer took the tip. A number of beavers were rounded up and dropped at strategic points in canyon streams, near the reservoir.

Now Fort Douglas has no water problem. But what the War Department hasn't been told is that beaver dams provided the solution.

Furthermore, you won't get anything but a vacant stare out of officers at the fort if you ask them how those beavers got where they are.

Court Upholds Death Clause Of Holding Act

By the Associated Press

New York, Jan. 13.—The constitutionality of the so-called "death clause" section of the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935 was upheld today by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals which affirmed two orders of the Securities and Exchange Commission against the North America Co.

The court upheld SEC orders directing the Public Utility Holding Co. to divest itself of all securities of the 80 companies it operated in 17 States and the District of Columbia (where control of the Potomac Electric Power Co. is involved), with the exception of that part of the public utility system known as the "St. Louis system."

The court also affirmed a SEC order denying the company's motion for leave to present additional arguments that the commission was without power to designate the particular system to be retained as its "single integrated public utility system" as defined by the 1935 act.

Also decided in favor of the SEC were a question raised by the company's petition as to the construction and application of a section of the act, and the petition's challenge of its constitutional validity.

The company was formed in 1890 under New Jersey laws and has its main offices in New York City. Its business consists of acquiring and holding for investment stocks and other securities, principally in the electric ultility field.

Russians Gain On All Fronts

in the northern Caucasus, but was "immediately thrown out with all the tanks knocked out."

(The Nazi high command further said strong new Russian attacks had been launched in the Tuapse-Novorossisk region of the western Caucasus, the area southeast of Lake Ilmen between Moscow and Leningrad, and along the whole Volkhov River front between Lakes Ilmen and Ladoga.)

Caucasus Drive Continues

While the Soviet offensive that has thrust to within 60 miles of Rostov in the lower Don was slowed down by stiffened resistance of large German reserve forces, the drive in the north Caucasus, nearing the junctions of Armavir and Salsk, maintained its swift pace across roads and towns littered with thousands of Nazi dead.

One Caucasus army unit alone wiped out more than 500 Germans, took 100 prisoners and seized much booty, including 10 field guns and 60,000 rounds of ammunition, in the Soviet sweep that now threatens to eject the invaders from the Maikop oil fields.

The midnight bulletin said the Soviets "continued the offensive" in the lower Don, but added that the Germans yesterday "concentrated a considerable tank and infantry force in a narrow sector with the aim of breaking through into our rear."

"Our troops," said the communique, "frustrated all these attempts and repulsed the enemy's counterattacks, inflicting huge losses on the Germans."

Nazi Battalion Annihilated

In another lower Don sector a Red army force was credited with annihilating a German infantry battalion.

Hundreds of Soviet planes bombed the big German Krasnodar Airdrome and tore gaps in withdrawing enemy columns. On Tuesday, the midnight communique related, Soviet airmen destroyed 20 German tanks and 200 troop and supply lorries and "dispersed and partly annihilated" four Nazi infantry companies.

'Forts' Wreck 34 Axis Planes In Libya Raid

land operations were marked only by patrol encounters between Bou Arada and Goubellat in Tunisia and along Rommel's route of retreat in eastern Tripolitania.

14 Shot Down

While the Allied communique stated only that 14 planes were shot down in sharp running combat during the Castel Benito raid, an Air Force spokesman added that at least 20 German planes were smashed on the ground. He estimated at least 10 more Nazi craft were damaged in the air—thus bringing the enemy's possible losses to as high as 44 planes.

The Axis pilots, flying Messerschmitt 109's, apparently were under instructions to get the Fortresses at all costs. Avoiding the American fighter escort, they swooped upon the big bombers and were met by terrific blasts from the raiders' cannon. Enemy plane after plane plummeted out of action but every Fortress reached home safely, although one limped in two hours late on two motors.

(At the eastern end of the Allied line—in Libya—the British command announced complementary air blows in which five enemy fighters were destroyed in combat; Tripoli and Homs in Libya and targets in Crete, Sicily and on Lampedusa Island were successfully attacked. In all these operations two Allied planes were lost.

(The British communique spoke only of patrol action aground in Libya, but front-line dispatches indicated that the British Eighth Army was increasing its pressure on Rommel.)

Allied headquarters also announced that British planes had been bombing the roads behind the Axis positions in Tunisia and that American craft had assaulted bridges between Sousse and Sfax on the Tunisian east coast.

Two German planes were shot down in an attempted attack on an Allied airfield; Allied losses in all these actions were but a single plane.

American Lightning fighter planes sweeping the roads in the Tripolitania-Tunisia border region put a long line of Axis transport under heavy cannon and machine-gun fire. An air-force spokesman estimated that at least 50 trucks, 5 of them filled with enemy troops, were destroyed.

The War Department issued the following communique, No. 294:

"North Africa:

"1. Patrolling encounters continued in the area between Bou Arada and Goubellat.

"2. During the night of January 11-12, Bisley planes bombed roads behind the enemy's positions.

"3. Yesterday a formation of Flying Fortresses (B-17) attacked the airfield at Castel Benito near Tripoli. Bombs were seen to burst on buildings and among aircraft on the ground. Our bombers were attacked by enemy fighters and in a running combat shot down 14 ME-109's without loss.

after which it became no longer necessary, the (surface) ships having been fitted with Degausing gear," which nullified the magnetic mines.

"Coastal Command" tells the publishable story of the aerial watchdogs of Britain's coasts and sea lanes. It reports they had flown 55 million miles in the first two years of war, escorted 4947 convoys and made 581 attacks on enemy submarines.

It tells of the intrepid young men in whom are combined the British heritage of nautical skill and the R. A. F.'s aeronautical genius and fighting spirit.

American-made Hudsons, Catalinas and later Liberators played a big part in the coastal command's invaluable service to the cause of the United Nations, the booklet said.

Shows Bismarck Pictures

Magnificently illustrated, the 144-page publication shows many pictures never before published, including a striking reconnaissance photograph of the German battleship Bismarck in Heltje Fjord just before she weighed anchor for her last fateful trip.

Also published for the first time is one of the most daring reconnaissance photographs of the war, obtained by a coastal command plane which slipped out of the clouds and got a sharp, detailed close-up of a Hipper class cruiser in drydock at Brest from an altitude of only 500 feet.

The function of the coastal command—"to find the enemy, to strike the enemy, to protect our ships"—has led to the formation of a great organization working in full cooperation with the Admiralty, although its members wear the R. A. F. uniform instead of naval blues, the publication pointed out.

The coastal command's biggest task is the battle of the Atlantic. Its strenuous efforts are credited with greatly reducing the menace of Focke-Wulfe Kondor air raiders and its relentless patrols have proved a big hindrance to enemy submarines.

Sea rescues have been an important part of the work. In the first two years of the war about 3000 persons adrift on the sea after U-boat attacks were sighted and helped by coastal command planes.

THE FACTS ABOUT THE ANTHRACITE STRIKE

Seventeen thousand miners out of the 88,000 in the anthracite producing area have walked out and refused to work. Others have threatened to join them.

Why?

Here are the facts:

The United Mine Workers of America have a contract with the operators. It doesn't expire until April 30.

Some miners object to the extra 50 cents a month in union dues. The walk-out is a protest against this increase in union dues.

In October, the miners' convention in Cincinnati voted to increase dues from $14 a year, including a $2 assessment, to $18, the maximum permitted by the union constitution without a vote of the local union. The convention also authorized the re-opening of the contract to provide for the 6-day operation.

On December 8, the United Mine Workers and the operators agreed to a 6-day work week with time and a half wages for the sixth consecutive day—to become effective immediately following an increase in maximum prices for anthracite by the Office of Price Administration to compensate for increased costs occasioned by the lengthening of the work-week.

On December 30, some miners went on strike because of the increase in union dues.

On January 9, the OPA increased the price of coal approximately 50 cents a ton. This made it possible for the operators and miners to put the 6-day contract into effect—affording miners the opportunity to increase weekly earnings approximately 30 per cent.

On January 11, the chairman of the National War Labor Board, Wm. H. Davis, wired to union officials:

> "The strike . . . is in violation of labor's pledge to the President that there will be no strikes for the duration of the war and that all labor disputes will be settled by peaceful means. The continuation of this strike is seriously hampering the war effort . . . orderly procedures have been established by the Government of the United States for the peaceful settlement of all disputes, and your dispute can and will be settled under these procedures."

On January 11, the chairman of the special Senate committee investigating the national defense program, Senator Truman, wired John L. Lewis:

> "The committee urges all mine workers to return to work at once and arrange for a conference to settle differences within the union at the earliest possible date. At the same time, patriotically supporting the war effort by seeing that the flow of anthracite coal is not stopped by internal differences in the union . . . the Nation expects and demands that this coal be produced."

On January 12, Secretary Ickes increased his original demand for anthracite in 1943 from 60 million to 65 million tons.

But with production being decreased rather than increased, due to the walk-out, the co-ordinator of solid fuels has suspended shipments to Canada and points west of Erie in order to relieve the situation on the Eastern Seaboard.

Notwithstanding this serious situation and the appeals from the Government, resolutions have been voted by local unions to the effect that unless a $2 a day increase in wages is granted by the operators beginning January 15, there will be a general strike.

Coal companies are abiding by their contract with the United Mine Workers. Both the coal companies and the miners are subject to Government rules and regulations on wages.

These strikes and threatened strikes are in direct violation of the union contract and union and Government understanding—and completely contrary to American sense of fair play and patriotism.

IN THE FACE OF THE ABOVE FACTS, WE ASK—CAN A STRIKE AT THIS TIME BE JUSTIFIED?

District Budget

While the Federal Government is increasing its debt burden at a terrific rate, States and municipalities all over the country are reducing theirs. This is the case with the District. The new budget provides for 130 per cent increase in the appropriation for debt retirement. In peacetime some of this money would, of course, be spent upon capital improvements. But such outlays now are out for the duration. Municipal construction would compete with war work, and this has the monopoly of our scarce materials. Accordingly, the money that would normally be spent in municipal improvement can be used to repay debt to the Federal Government. In this way the District's financial position is put in better shape for the time when improvements and borrowing for them are possible. With much the same prudence Secretary Mellon reduced the Federal debt out of the bumper revenues of the '20's in preparation for the economic collapse.

Other items in the District budget show the increasing toll of high wages and costs in maintaining District services. Another $7,700,000 has been added to the expense of operating and maintaining District government, and most of it is accounted for by bigger and fuller payrolls. The biggest increase in appropriations is for the National Capital Park and Planning Commission. This is up $709,580, though the rise in this case is caused by the incidence of debt retirement rather than by a rise in operating costs. Public schools and police also will cost much more, though the reason is obvious from the city's growth. The Fire Department will get $157,445 less, but the reason is that there is a backlog of orders for fire-fighting equipment out of the previous year's appropriations still awaiting delivery, and new requirements thus had to be postponed.

The Commissioners originally prepared the budget before increases in costs, mainly wages, had changed the fiscal outlook for this year. So, when those estimates came to the Budget Bureau, that body suggested revision. There was no attempt such as seemed the case when the budget figures were announced that the bureau rewrote the budget. This was an old practice which, happily, has not returned. The budget is the work and responsibility of the Commissioners. Their problem was to balance the need to provide for the added demands upon municipal services against the difficulty of making such provision in competition with war demands and the prospect that the present immigration into the city will be reversed when the war is over. This accounts for the caution in the Commissioners' estimates. The burden put upon the municipality by the wartime activity of the Federal Government puts in glaring relief the static item of six million dollars which the Federal Government allows the District.

Hitting The Wehrmacht

The speed with which the Red army has been able to advance in the northern Caucasus during the past few weeks and particularly in the past few days suggests that a large-scale German evacuation is now taking place. On Monday no fewer than six major points on or near the railroad line running northwest from Grozny to Rostov fell into Russian hands. Among these points was the important town of Georgvsk, which the Red forces had previously captured. Altogether, in fact, it is estimated that the Russian advance in the Caucasus has now covered a distance of 200 miles.

In view of the large quantities of Nazi supplies which the Red army has taken, it is probable that the Germans waited until the last moment before retreating. There is no sign, however, that this retreat is in any sense a rout. On the contrary, the Germans in the Caucasus appear to have taken a leaf out of Rommel's book. In other words, they have managed in their flight to the west to remain ahead of the advancing Russian forces. Still the magnitude of the Russian successes is not on that account to be minimized. What is taking place in the Caucasus is the most heartening development of the war, particularly in view of the disappointment in Tunisia and the mounting success of the German submarine warfare. We cannot yet be sure that Hitler may not have waited too long before ordering a retreat. For the "waist" of the southern front at Rostov is steadily narrowing as at least four Russian columns push on toward that strategic center from the north, the east and the south. At one point they are now believed to be only 45 miles away. Thus, regardless of the present German retreat in the Caucasus, the fate of a considerable Nazi force may be sealed if the Russians do manage to reach Rostov.

As to that, the events of the next weeks will show whether the Russians possess sufficient force to break through the German defenses around Rostov and establish themselves once again on the Sea of Azov. But whatever the ultimate outcome of their present offensive, it is clear that they have already dealt the Wehrmacht a powerful blow, one from which Germany may never be able to recover.

Bronx Cheer

When Hanson W. Baldwin went to Guadalcanal last year, he reported that one of the minor amusements of the boys in the Solomons consisted of listening to the naval communiques about the actions in which they had participated. In many instances "the men who did the job laughed at our own announcements." They knew differently. But if the Navy Department wanted to feed such dope to the American people, well, that was its own affair, and introduced a touch of gayety to life in the Solomons fox holes. Another inquiring reporter ought to tour our outposts in the Pacific and let us know what the boys are thinking about many other things at home. The prospective shipment to them, for instance, of Eddie Flynn as the Minister of the Nation for whom they are fighting to the Nation with whom they are fighting and as the personal representative among them of their Commander in Chief, to boot.

We daresay that, beginning at the top with Nimitz and Halsey, the reaction all the way down the line will be one of amazement. There is only one man we can think of among the commanders who—Senate permitting—must soon take the translated Eddie to their bosom who could not have been surprised. That is MacArthur. MacArthur is proof nowadays against any Rooseveltian shocks. He has had experience. Not till he got to Australia, whence he was sent ostensibly to command the Pacific offensive, did he realize that he was to be "cribb'd, cabin'd and confin'd." But, except for MacArthur, the astonishment over Eddie's nomination down under must have been well nigh unanimous. The announcement was so anticlimactic. Remember that these boys had just heard their Commander in Chief on the state of the Union. It was the old familiar voice, ringing with confidence, vibrant with hope for a world nearer to the heart's desire. They must have thrilled, as we did, to those lofty sentiments of the good society flowing with milk and honey and with idealism and brotherhood.

It is said that after the lord mayor's coach comes the dirt cart. But they are seldom telescoped so neatly as was the message to Congress and the nomination of Eddie Flynn to his post with our fighting Ally. That would be too contemptuous of the lord mayor's coach—too close an approach of the ridiculous to the sublime. Didn't the President himself, in his address on the state of the Union call for the "exercise of a sense of proportion"? The boys will wonder, perhaps, why the President forgot so quickly to give them an example of it. Maybe they will ask questions about the state of the White House. In the hellholes which have grown out of the old fox holes, there will certainly be a lot of head-scratching, and possibly the wonderment will wind up with the President's own confession that "Washington may be a madhouse." He meant it as a fighting madhouse. They will mean it as a politics madhouse. And we doubt whether they will be as amused by this exhibition as they were when the President thought the American people were so lacking in stamina and fortitude that for a while they had to have the wool pulled over their eyes about the facts of life and death in wartime.

Buying In Advance

Price Administrator Henderson's parting shot is unfortunate. He has unqualifiedly indorsed the plan worked out by a member of his staff, Rolf Nugent, to encourage consumers to buy automobiles and other durable goods with money currently saved, delivery being deferred until after the war. Stripped of camouflage, this proposal is a device for inducing the public to lend money to the Government by purchasing special certificates on the installment plan. These certificates would be used after the war to pay for specified kinds of goods. Their holders would have prior purchase claims on such goods, in addition to receiving interest in the form of increases in the value of their purchasing rights or claims.

Secretary Morgenthau recently said bluntly that he could discover no advantages in this plan over the purchase of war bonds. We thoroughly agree. The Secretary pointed out, moreover, that the plan would discriminate against members of the armed forces. They would, he explained, come home to find highly paid warworkers holding prior claims on consumer goods that might be in great demand. This is a valid objection, too. But in our opinion this objection—which has since been met by including provisions for the benefit of the armed services—is one of the least important reasons for opposing the Nugent plan.

The overriding objection to the Henderson proposal, as we stated in discussing the scheme some weeks ago, is that it is bad public policy to commit the country impliedly to rapid conversion of war industries to satisfy demands for the things people now want and may not want later. In any case it is unwise to pile up savings for later consumption of goods that will entail postwar cash claims on the Treasury. Already an immense volume of Government debt representing demand obligations is being created, and these special certificates would add so much more to the total.

As far as possible the Government should fight shy of proposals that would tie its hands in any way after the war. The country will then be confronted by an unprecedented task of converting wartime industry to peacetime needs. We know neither what we are going to want or need most nor how soon it will be feasible to supply our needs. The work of reconstruction will be better done if we avoid entangling commitments for an unknown future. Finally, special certificates are not as desirable a means of mopping up excess purchasing power as are war bonds. War bonds give people a reserve of purchasing power that can be used not merely for the buying of automobiles or refrigerators but also for meeting any of the emergency needs of the postwar future.

Cold Comfort

In some Eastern cities, householders with coal-burning furnaces find themselves in even worse case than their neighbors with oil furnaces. Deliveries of coal are virtually unobtainable, and many homes have been totally without heat for some days past. How far this situation is due to the strike in the Pennsylvania anthracite fields, how far to the increasing difficulties of transportation, how far to the extra burden placed upon the coal dealers by the sudden conversion of so many domestic and institutional heating plants from oil to coal fuel, and how far to general muddle, it is difficult to say. By Providential circumstance the weather these past few days, though for the most part well below freezing, has not been abnormally cold. At the same time it is easy to see that the situation presents perilous possibilities should we be visited by one of those waves of subzero cold which are not altogether out of the question in this climate at this time of year.

Meantime, Mr. Lester Scott, director of the oil heating division of the Merchants and Manufacturers Association, tells the Senate investigating committee that "a very large number of householders are going to run out of oil at the same time," and that the dealers do not have the trucks to enable them to catch up in time with deliveries. Thus the strictly rationed consumers of oil and the unrationed consumers of anthracite coal find themselves in pretty much the same unhappy fix. It is not too difficult to envisage a situation in which a majority, or something close to a majority, of householders will be confronted with the prospect of a heatless February. Those most severely affected, of course, would be children, the aged and the invalid. But the effect on the whole population would also be great, and would certainly have serious consequences to the war program. Nor, considering the sadly congested condition of most of these cities, can the danger of epidemic disease be dismissed.

Since there seem to be no serious depletions in reserve stocks of either fuel oil or coal, it is obvious that there is something utterly askew about the way in which the whole fuel situation has been managed up to now. It would be well if Senator Maloney and his committee would extend their inquiry to cover the whole situation, including the apparently irresponsible strike of the anthracite miners, and the extraordinary delay of the authorities to take decisive action in so serious a matter. It is apparently not enough to say to the strikers in Eddie Rickenbacker's words: If you had to see the boys out there in their hellholes, you'd be ashamed of yourselves.

Five Sons

When the Secretary of the Navy heard of Mrs. Sullivan in Waterloo, Iowa, who had five sons serving in the Navy, he asked her to christen a tug. Now the news is released that all the five sons are missing in action. They were on the cruiser Juneau, which was sunk last November in the Battle of the Solomons. How about making it a cruiser, Mr. Secretary?

TOMORROW YOU

The bell rings, the door shuts, Weeklies are put away.
I stand by the desk, book open, and think, "One more day.
They are all mine so far, the absent are only ill,
Or cutting the class; with me in college still."
It is time, and I talk, but whom am I talking to?
Unmarried widow. Dead man. Is it you? Or you?
Recite now, girl whose lover will be drowned.
Answer me, boy whose brother never will be found.
You, silent in the back row waiting, speak
Before you put on uniform next month, next week.
The question is—the question is, who? Who?
Quick, which one among you am I talking to?
You ought to know. The answer is: it will be
Not the well-known, and not those near to me
At first, and not the names I'd miss the most
At first, but the tall guy at the car-stop post
You miss after two weeks, then your roommate's friend,
Then yours, then gaps nothing at all can mend.
Then you. There's nothing at all that I can do,
But the one I'll call on first tomorrow is you,
And wonder which it is I really fear,
The "Here, sir," or the "Sorry, but he isn't here."

Korean Conscription

By Seldon Menefee

For Combat Duty

JAPAN'S official propagandists seldom mention Korea, except to tell the world from time to time that the Koreans are giving "absolute adherence" to the Japanese, or that they are supporting with true abnegation whatever tasks are undertaken by the Japanese authorities."

Occasionally, however, a significant item comes through the blanket of censorship. Recent Japanese home broadcasts monitored by the FCC Foreign Broadcast Intelligence Service and made available by the Office of War Information, for example, tell us that the Japanese are now planning to recruit Koreans for combat duty.

But conscription will not begin until 1944, and will be preceded by six months to a year of special "preconscription training." The program is to be limited to youths from 17 to 21 years of age as of August, 1943.

Character Training Important

The training course will be calculated "to give Korean youths the fundamental character training necessary for them as members of the imperial forces." Its real purpose is obviously to render politically harmless any Korean who might be taken into the Japanese army.

In this connection, Korean sources in Washington report that early in the "China incident" some 3000 Koreans volunteered for military service. After careful selection, about 500 of them were accepted into the Japanese army. By the following year, however, almost half of the Koreans had been court-martialed for killing their Japanese officers.

These reports would seem to belie the recent statement by Edgar Snow, author of "The Battle for Asia," that 200,000 Koreans are already being trained for service with the Japanese army and that some of them have already been in action on the southern front. The only Koreans reported to have been encountered so far by Allied forces in the South Pacific have been a few laborers brought to New Guinea by the Japanese.

Koreans have been in action on the Chinese front, but not on the side of their Japanese conquerors. Last September Korean troops were reported to have inflicted severe losses on the Japanese at Canton. They were assumedly part of the Korean Independent Army, which is now a part of the Chungking army.

In all, perhaps as many as 35,000 Koreans are fighting the Japanese in China. Most of these are guerilla fighters and irregulars in Manchuria and North China.

In Korea itself are 23 million people who hate their Japanese oppressors with a cold fury that will admit no compromise. Almost a year ago Gen. Jiro Minami, governor-general of Korea since 1936, was replaced by Gen. Kuniaki Koiso, a member of the ultra-nationalist clique. Koiso, who commanded the Japanese forces that attacked Soviet Changkufeng in 1938 and was subsequently relieved of his command, brought with him a Mr. Tanaka, a Japanese Himmler, to take control of the military police in Korea.

Violent Outbreaks Increase

But in spite of tightened control over the Koreans, outbreaks of violence increased in the months that followed. On Quelpart Island, off the southern tip of the Korean peninsula, Korean workers destroyed a Japanese air base in March. Three months later a British broadcast reported that 1000 Japanese and 2000 Koreans had been killed in a battle in which Japanese tanks, boats and planes were destroyed.

There are nearly a million Koreans in Japan itself, many of them working in war industries. Underground Korean sources claim that a large number of these are organized into the Eurlidan and other anti-Japanese societies and have committed numerous acts of violence against Japanese government officials. It seems probable that these Koreans will form an effective fifth column when the war comes to Japan proper.

Korea was one of the first victims of Japanese aggression, and in spite of 38 years of the most brutal repression any nation has ever known it has continued to resist its conquerors. A provisional government of the Republic of Korea has existed in China since 1919 and is represented in Washington by Dr. Syngman Rhee, head of the American Korean Commission. Dr. Rhee maintains that if the two million or so Koreans exiled in China could be adequately equipped and supplied, they would be invaluable in the struggle against Japan.

Small Business

As you so aptly said in the editorial on small business: "Clearly we can never say that our resources have been fully utilized till the SWPC makes a better showing." I believe that if the public were better informed and more aroused to the dangers of small business disappearing from the scene, there would be less talk and more action in certain governmental circles. Your valuable paper could make a most notable contribution in that direction, as I know that newspaper editors throughout the country follow your columns with great interest. BUSINESS MAN.

More Headaches For Hitler

LAST SUNDAY, according to a Berlin announcement, Adolf Hitler conferred for some time at his headquarters with Premier Marshal Ion Antonescu of Rumania. What was actually said is not revealed. But the conversations are officially described as having been "imbued with the spirit of friendship and tested comradeship in arms of both nations." This, no doubt, is eyewash.

NOVER

Rumania has been one of Germany's most valuable satellites. Without Rumanian oil the Wehrmacht would long ago have been halted in its tracks for lack of fuel and lubricants. Without Rumanian wheat—Rumania is one of Europe's great granaries—Germany's food position would be much worse than it is and it is far from good today. And without the cannon fodder which Marshal Antonescu sent to the Eastern Front in such generous quantities Hitler would have had to scrape his own manpower barrel even more ruthlessly than he has had to do.

WHAT HAS RUMANIA received in return for its contributions to the Third Reich?

Her tangible rewards have been Bessarabia and northern Bukokvina which with German help she reconquered from Russia. In addition Hitler has held out to the kingdom the vague promise that the Russian area on the other side of the Dniester up to and including the Black Sea port of Odessa would go to Rumania in the final division of spoils after the war. But even these gains, actual or tentative, depend on an Axis victory and in view of recent events in Russia and Africa millions of Rumanians are now far less certain than they may once have been that the Axis is going to triumph.

In the meantime Rumanian casualties have steadily mounted; the country has been steadily and systematically looted by the Nazis and an inflationary spiral has set in.

The war on Russia which was to be a six-week affair has become an endless nightmare.

No wonder that Rumania is today in a state of incipient revolt, a situation that menaces both Hitler and his Rumanian Quisling, Antonescu.

AS A MATTER of fact, Rumania is only one of the headaches that have developed for Hitler in that part of Europe. Signs of rebellion are also beginning to multiply in Hungary and Bulgaria, as well as in the Hitler-created state of Slovakia.

There is no dissolvent like defeat. But both because of its economic importance to the German war machine and because it is, despite losses of territory to Hungary and Bulgaria, still the largest and most populous state of southeastern Europe, the growing disaffection in Rumania gives the Nazis the greatest cause for alarm.

Hitherto Hitler had had no difficulty in keeping Antonescu in line and, through Antonescu, Rumania.

Hitler had held over his Rumanian Quisling the ever-present possibility that he would be replaced by an Iron Guardist. He has warned Rumania that if she did not continue to pour out her blood and treasure in the fight against Russia, that part of Transylvania which Rumania was allowed to retain (two fifths were given to Hungary) would be taken from her. And, of course, there was always the possibility, of which Antonescu did not have to be reminded, that if he balked at Hitler's demands, the country would be occupied by German troops.

HOW MUCH LONGER Antonescu can continue delivering the goods to his German master is problematical, however. For there is a limit beyond which Antonescu cannot go in squeezing his people for Germany's benefit and that limit may be close at hand. Furthermore, the threat of a complete German military occupation of Rumania has begun to lose its force, now that Germany has need of every able-bodied soldier elsewhere.

There are indications, in fact, that here and there in Europe, Bulgaria is a case in point, Hitler has reduced his garrisons. He may have done so, in part, because he has had to abandon earlier plans of an invasion of Turkey. But another reason is that he no longer has enough troops for all his needs and must economize where and how he can. Even when, as in the case of Bulgaria, the withdrawal of German forces may encourage rebellious elements to begin acting up.

IN A REVEALING radio address over the Frankfort station the other day, Lieut. Gen. Kurt Dietmar, one of Germany's foremost military critics, pointedly hinted at the serious turn this manpower problem has taken.

"The Germans," he said, "have had to use up a large number of people to secure the tremendous areas they have captured in Europe. The fighting front was thereby deprived of valuable forces and the burden of the fighting has all too often fallen on shoulders which were inevitably all too narrow to bear the burden of the fight against numerical superiority."

So even while Hitler increases his demands on Antonescu for more Rumanian cannon-fodder as well as for more Rumanian wheat, he can no longer threaten Rumania to the same extent he once was able to do. In his relations with Germany's satellites as in the field of military action the law of diminishing returns is beginning to operate against the Reich.

Trucking At The Pentagon

A few minutes ago in a Columbia Pike drugstore my eye dropped on a headline which went something like "Jeffers Warns of Rubber Failure." In my ears was the steady roar of heavy trucks, like the sound of a great military convoy passing by. It was the endless chain of huge camp trucks that has been rumbling up and down Columbia Pike for months, day and night.

This mighty fleet of trucks is engaged in war work, of course. It is hurrying to complete the labyrinthic highways of the Pentagon Building before the end of the war, when, of course, the project will become obsolete. Having exhausted all the earth-moving possibilities within rifle range of the building, the engineers must now bring their dirt from a point some miles distant.

Instead of constructing curlicue mud pies 50 feet deep all around the world's biggest bomb bait, and thus rendering its unmistakableness from the air complete, the Army engineers would much rather be at the fighting front. If it wasn't important to confuse all approaches to the Pentagon, they wouldn't be doing it. And, if they could find enough dirt nearby, they wouldn't be burning up all those thousands of gallons of gasoline a day in those trucks, and using up thousands of pounds of rubber a week. Dislikes Strangle-Hold

Who gave OPA authority to crack down (as they state) on the "A" motorists, so that they could not go shopping with their cars, or to the movies if they wished? Under what law do they get authority to pay for a Gestapo to check on us, the people of the United States?

Has Congress got power to crack down on OPA? If so, why don't they use it? Use it now before these birds get more of a strangle-hold on us.

If OPA has authority, why doesn't it crack down on the misuse of Government cars? And particularly the flagrant misuse of hospitality shown by all of the embassies. It seems they don't dare to crack anyone with a semblance of political power.

$5000 Complaint

I came to Washington 24 years ago and my entrance salary was $1800 per annum when I entered Government service. I have worked hard and raised a family, all of whom are now former tax-exemptions but three are still dependents. My salary has tripled in 24 years, but next year I am faced with the following deductions even before I begin to meet such heavy regular items as life insurance premium, payments on a home, and household expenses:

U. S. income tax	$900
D. C. income tax	45
Retirement	270
Victory tax	245
20% increased cost of living	1080
War bonds (10%)	540
	$3080
Balance to live on	2320
Base Salary	$5400

Last year I just about broke even paying an income tax of $375 and earning overtime of $1060. This year I am paying an income tax on last year's overtime and receive no overtime.

When I came to Washington I worked seven hours a day and had half a day on Saturday. It is now eight hours every day. I actually receive $10 a week more, now, than I did in 1918.

It seems to me that the $5000 and over employe has a legitimate complaint. OLD TIMER.

Just Punishment

They're still a "noble distance" from being tamed, it's true. But it does this citizen good to see that some of these chauffeurs of Government vehicles who think their positions give them some Hitleric license to burn the wind, are beginning to get cracked down on and get theirs—and how—in traffic court. In view of the lucidity and patent truthfulness of your editorial, "Voice From Rome," the undersigned rather expected sooner or later to read (as he did today) a letter to the editor including the phrases "sheer stupidity," "intentional bias" and "insult to every decent citizen."

The Once Over

American Strength

("Three American airmen, Edward Mallory Vogel, Tennessee; Izzie Goldberg, the Bronx, N. Y., and Edwin J. Sipowski, Waukegan, Ill., killed in a take-off in San Juan Harbor, were buried side by side with a Protestant chaplain, a Roman Catholic priest and a rabbi officiating. The flag for which they fought flew over them."—News item.)

I.

A chaplain, a priest and a rabbi—
Protestant—Catholic—Jew—
Three Yanks in three simple caskets—
Three colors, red, white and blue. . . .
A hush on a tropic island
As notes from a bugle fall—
Three rituals slowly chanting—
Three faiths in a common call!

II.

A lad from the Bronx; another
Who joined up in Tennessee;
A third one from far Waukegan—
A typical bunch, those three!
A crash in a naval airplane. . . .
A rush to its crumpled side. . . .
And nearby Old Glory marking
The reason the trio died.

III.

They answered a call to duty
From church and from synagogue—
From hillside and teeming city. . .
Three names in a naval log!
Each raised in his separate concepts—
Each having his form to pray—
But all for a faith triumphant
When rituals fade away!

IV.

A prayer in Latin phrases—
And one with more ancient lore;
A Protestant simple service—
All one on a distant shore!
"Qui tollis peccata mundi" . . .
And, "Enter ye unto rest." . . .
A blessing from ancient Moses . .
For three who had met the test!

V.

This is the story mighty
Making our sinews strong;
Boys from the many altars
Warring on one great wrong!
This is the Nation's power,
This is its suit of mail;
Land where each narrow bigot
Knows that he can't prevail!

L'Envoi

A chaplain, a priest and a rabbi—
Protestant—Catholic—Jew—
Knowing that forms are nothing
If but the cause is true;
Challenge all craven bigots!

Australia and the Bronx

This department cites as an example of cockeyed rulings by officials their answer to an auto owner's question whether he can drive a car to his home a few miles outside the city to lay it up for the duration. Here's the answer: "No. Put it in dead storage at the nearest place." In other words, pay out heavy and prolonged storage charges (out of money you are asked to put into war bonds), rather than put it in your own garage without cost!

Awah-h-h!

Dedicate the situation
'Twixt Australia and the Bronx;
'Tis a crisis for great leaders
Of the most distinguished "conks."

Unity is all essential
Between Darwin, as you know,
And the points above the Harlem
Where the leading statesman grow.

Halsey, Nimitz and MacArthur—
Let your cares and worries slide!
And the Bronx is at your side.

Radio Appeals

I should like to call to the attention of "Totally Disgusted" a few things which his letter in The Post January 1 indicates he has overlooked in his frustration over missing a Charlie McCarthy program.

1. On December 8, 1942, the United States declared war on the Axis nations.

2. That declaration was made in the name of every citizen of the United States

3. The nations composing the Axis gang have been preparing for this war over a period of 20 or more years.

4. While the Axis partners were so occupied in preparation for an all-out war, the people of this country were expending more energy and more money on entertainment, recreation and tom-foolery.

5. While some of the American people were striving to outchisel each other for an extra pound of coffee or extra gallons of gas to burn up going to football games, night clubs and rural beer joints, other Americans have been fighting and dying on battle fronts and oil tankers (victims of Axis submarines).

6. While "Totally Disgusted" sits comfortably beside his radio listening to Charlie McCarthy's amusing, if witless, repertoire, in hundreds of villages, towns and cities under enemy control innocent women and children are being bombed and starved to death.

7. The very obvious attitude of too many citizens of the United States regarding the necessity of foregoing personal pleasures in favor of a more unified effort on the home front has made necessary a more personalized appeal to the people. This can only be accomplished via the radio. The fact that the program chosen for cancellation happened to be a favorite doesn't justify the complaint.

It is not my purpose to criticize the participants nor the sponsors of the program to which reference is made. MORE DISGUSTED.

Today And Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

A New Order Of Things

The figures presented in the war budget give us a crude estimate, provided that the measuring rod does not change, of the growth of American military power in the four-year period from the summer of 1940 to the summer of 1944. The measuring rod is the dollar, and the figures would, of course, mean less than nothing if within reasonable variations the military value of a dollar in terms of munitions and manpower were not constant.

LIPPMANN

In fact the military dollar has been fairly stable, and, therefore, these figures can be used as a measure of our progress. We see from them that in the first year of war after Pearl Harbor our monthly over-all output of military power has grown from a rate of two to a rate of six billions a month, and that beginning perhaps at the end of the coming summer the output can be stepped up toward a rate of eight billions. Though at first glance the total figures for the coming fiscal year seem "fantastic," as a matter of fact there is no reason to doubt that the program is, as the President said, feasible.

It calls for an additional 30 per cent to be attained in the course of the next 18 months. There is no reason to doubt that a country which has gone from a rate of two to a rate of six in 12 months can, now that its facilities are in working order, push on from six to eight.

THOUGH the absolute output is enormous, whether we compare it with that of our enemies or of our Allies, it is almost certainly safely within the limits of American capacity. The reason for thinking this is that our troops and the civilians will still be maintained at a higher standard of life than those of any other belligerent. What we are seeing, therefore, for the first time is how far any American has been from realizing the true potentialities of the country once there is a determined effort to draw upon its hidden, neglected and unrealized reserves. There is not a man alive today who would, at the time Hitler invaded France, have dared to think that the United States could three years later have a military output greater by far than the whole civilian output of the country in its most prosperous year, and still maintain a relatively high standard of civilian life.

No one who has talked about American productivity has ever had the boldness to imagine what in fact it has already proved itself to be.

NOR IS it possible today, I believe, for any one of us to do more than to begin to readjust his ideas to the wholly unexpected realities that are being disclosed. We have moved from one order of magnitude in our economy to a wholly different order of magnitude, and we shall be increasingly astonished at how obsolete and irrelevant have become a very great number of our economic and financial assumptions.

The impact of this demonstration of American productivity upon economic science will be analogous to the impact on a natural science when the microscope or the telescope discloses a new dimension of things. Our estimates of what is possible, practicable, necessary, desirable and normally to be expected in the progress of our economy will be irrevocably altered.

WE SHALL find that in this new phase of the industrial revolution the scale of values will be greatly changed and greatly enlarged. It is a change of scale like that which air power has introduced into war and into the geography of politics and human intercourse: It requires a reconstruction of the very modes of our thought. It is a change of scale like that which has been occurring all over the earth for nearly two centuries as the new industrial technology has penetrated the ancient preindustrial societies. For when in an advanced economy, like the American, men discover that they are quite capable of a productivity that no one else ever dreamed of before, the difference between their accustomed and their new ways of thinking will be not one of degree but of kind.

A dog which suddenly grew to be as big as a horse would no longer be treated as a very big dog, and its proud master would find he had to change his ideas and his feelings about dogs.

WE SHALL find that in the presence of this demonstration of American productivity, the change of scale, the new order of the magnitude of things, will compel us to reexamine almost all our common assumptions on such matters as taxes, the national debt, tariffs, international commerce, finance, imports, exports, and investments.

One illustration will do. When the year's Government deficit is to be 50 billion dollars, even after all conceivable taxes and savings, then the standard theories of how to deal with inflation have obviously become obsolete. The measures required in this utterly unprecedented and unforeseen state of affairs cannot be merely to do more and more of what has hitherto been done. For more and more of that will still be ludicrously short of the real dimensions of the problem, so far short that we have to find radically new premises from which to think about it at all—measures as radical perhaps as the creation of what amounts to an emergency currency interposed between the actual purchasing power and the available supply of commodities.

THUS WE shall find that as the war will bring us to plain living, the management of its consequences will demand some very high thinking. Here we shall feel deeply the absence of the young men who are away at war. For I do not know whether we who remain behind have the freshness and the vigor of mind, whether we are not too sunk in our grooves, too wearily ready to go on thinking what we are used to thinking, to welcome and to learn to master so much that is perplexing and strange.

BUT of one thing we may be certain: It is out of this disclosure of the true potential power of America that the real issues of the future will be formed, and not by the resurrection of the old stale controversies of the two decades between the two world wars. Isolationists and interventionists, progressives and conservatives, Old Dealers and New Dealers alike will find, as the impact of events becomes more evident, that they are no longer talking about real things, and therefore no longer about interesting things, and that to the generation which comes back from the war they will sound as amiable, as irrelevant, and as eccentric as two old codgers quarreling in their club about the Battle of Bull Run.

Kaiser Loses Move To Cancel Hearing

Portland, Oreg., Jan. 13 (AP).—Trial Examiner Harry N. Denham refused yesterday to grant a motion by Kaiser shipyards to dismiss a hearing on unfair labor practice charges against three Kaiser Company shipyards.

Kaiser attorneys asked the dismissal, asserting the shipyards were owned by the Government and that the National Labor Relations Board lacks jurisdiction.

Denham, in denying the motion, ruled that the Government's control over the company was only that of a contractor guarding his interests in subletting contracts.

Your Federal Income Tax

No. 1

What Is Income Tax?

The Federal income tax is as the name implies, a tax levied upon incomes, and it is payable in relation to the amount of income. Income, for Federal income tax purposes, means in general any compensation for one's services, whether the compensation be in money or in goods or other services; it includes also the net value received for the product of one's labor, as farm produce in the case of a farmer; income from investments; profit from business operations; and other gains from sales and exchanges of goods and property. Certain limited categories of income are, however, tax exempt, and to the extent of such exemption are excluded in computing the tax.

Because of exemptions from the tax given to persons having less than certain stated amounts of income, as well as because of various deductions and credits allowable, only a small proportion of the number of persons receiving income have until recently been subject to the tax. Thus, of the estimated 55 million persons in this country who received income in one form or another during the calendar year 1941, only some 26 million were required to file Federal income tax returns for that year, while of these same 26 million, more than nine million were not taxable due to credits and deductions allowable.

As a result of the lowering of exemptions, many more persons are now subject to the Federal income tax than before, and for the calendar year 1942 it is estimated that more than 35 million persons will file Federal income tax returns. To the large number of persons now subject to the Federal income tax, who have never reported income before for Federal tax purposes, an understanding of the law and applicable regulations is of prime importance.

An income tax return is a declaration on the part of the taxpayer of his total taxable income for the year, together with the various deductions, exemptions, and credits to which he is entitled. It is in reliance upon voluntary disclosure, and the integrity of taxpayers generally, that the cost of administration of the income tax can be kept at a minimum. Though the return is a voluntary statement, any person who willfully makes a return which he does not believe to be true and correct in every material matter is subject to the penalties provided by law.

The first requirement of the law is the filing of an appropriate return. For individuals generally, this must be done by March 15 following the end of the calendar year. The return must be filed with the appropriate collector of internal revenue for the district in which is located the legal residence or principal place of business of the person making the return.

Under the present law every single person, and every married person not living with husband or wife, having total income (earnings, together with other income) of $500 or more, and married persons living with husband or wife throughout the taxable year, who have an aggregate income (total earnings of both husband and wife, together with other income) of $1200 or more, regardless of the amount of net income, must file a return.

Hoover Renews Plea for Opening of Blockade to Stave Off Famine in Europe

(Third of a series by Mr. Hoover.)

By Herbert Hoover

Japan is an entirely different problem from the European Axis. Her home front at this time is the reverse of the European home fronts, for her civil population is very well supplied with necessities and generally in high spirits. She is still in the ascendant stages of total war.

Japan also differs from our European enemies on the military front. The European Axis is depending mainly on land war for victory. Japan's ultimate destiny depends mainly on sea warfare. Germany's conquests are over land and Japan's are basically conquests over sea.

Japan with Manchuria is normally about self-supporting as to food. Her conquests have given her far more rubber, oil, tin, lead, zinc, copper and hardening metals, rice and vegetable oils than she needs. She has a possible shortage in iron. Her people are far better off in standard of living than before Pearl Harbor.

Spirit of the Rise

The spirit of her people, depressed during some years by costly and inconclusive fighting in Asia, has been given a fresh impulse by apparent victory over the white races.

Her great weakness is that all her conquests are like beads on a string. And the string is her merchant marine and its air and naval protection. Through that alone can she, for the present, maintain her garrisons and her many supplies to support the home front. If that merchant ship lifeline should be cut by adequately based airplanes, all the southern arms of the octopus would be paralyzed.

The Japanese airplane, ship and tank output is not one-fourth what we can produce. Her ships, planes and men are under steady attrition from the British and ourselves. With every growth of our air and sea power and our advancing bases, this destruction becomes more severe.

Merchant shipping is the Achilles heel of her "coprosperity order" in Asia. And if her sea transport be steadily crippled, she will start degeneration in munitions and raw materials on the home front.

Force of Blockade

The Axis armies have overrun 12 independent democratic countries and part of Russia. More than 200 million people have been ravished, their men murdered, their women and children starved. Many of these countries have always lived partly on food and feed for their animals imported from overseas. As the result of the blockade they have had to slaughter their animals down to those that could be fed.

Their ground crops are decreasing. Their fertilizers have greatly diminished. Their agricultural machinery is run down. Each winter the food is less and less. Theirs is not food shortage. They are starving.

The "normal" ration of meats and fats combined in these countries ranges from 2 to 4 pounds per month. Compare this with the American consumption rate of about 20 pounds per month.

I have a survey of a number of Belgian industrial areas which shows 35 per cent of the children are suffering from scurvy, rickets and tuberculosis. Most of the city schools are closed because the children are too weak to do their work. The mortality is appalling. The same stories come from other cities.

Wants Blockade Eased

During the last 18 months I have repeatedly insisted that the blockade should be opened to allow an experiment in supplies for thier soup kitchens which feed the women, children and unemployed men. I proposed that the experiment should be conducted by the neutral governments of Europe after agreements with the Germans that both the imports and the native food should be unmolested and that the whole should be supervised by agents of these neutral nations.

Six months ago, under the pressures of the Turkish, Swedish and Swiss governments, this plan was adopted for Greece. Greek lives are being saved, although the amounts are insufficient. Our State Department now reports that the Germans do not benefit and our Government encourages support to the Greek committee. The arguments against my proposals have now proved to be wrong by the Greek experience.

Is there now any reason why the Swedes and Swiss should not be allowed also to save the children in Belgium, Holland, Norway and Poland? They are willing to undertake it; they have ships that cannot be placed in Allied war service. They can get food in South America. Most of the invaded countries have financial resources in the hands of their exiled governments to pay for this food.

The Germans can save their people from famine by surrender. These people are helpless.

Food for the small democracies has a bearing on the whole future of freedom. These people are the only centers in Europe of fidelity to democracy. It is not a pleasant prospect if they are to bring up a generation of children stunted in body and embittered in mind. Nor are promises of food after the war of much avail to people in the cemeteries.

Hitherto this has been considered a problem for British decision. But it is now also an American responsibility. And I dislike to contemplate the verdict of history on our default in that prime foundation of Christianity—compassion.

On the Line

—With CONSIDINE

New York, Jan. 13 (INS).—We've got a fine charity sports event scheduled for Madison Square Garden tomorrow night. It's the Rangers vs. the Detroit Red Wings, a regular league game between two of the loop's bitterest foes, and all the moo goes to the Red Cross. Even the players will pay to get in.

CONSIDINE

"It's the perfect charity, for us," Frank Boucher, coach of the Rangers, remarked yesterday, as he recuperated in the Rangers' office from numerous spiritual wounds. "We need some first-aid." He cocked a thumb across the room where sat Phillip Watson, the eminent Scotch-French-Canadian, painfully typing a letter with his good left hand and the single finger which sticks out of the cast on his broken right hand.

"Then we've got Gordon Davidson, with both eyes darned near closed and a nine-stitch wound over one of them just healing; Al Pike, with a football for a knee; Bryan Hextall, with a black eye down to his chin, and a few others. But, of course, it could be worse." He didn't say how.

The Rangers-Wings rivalry is developing into something that promises to decimate seriously Canada's manpower. This charity game will be their sixth meetings of the year. Each one has produced fireworks and hospital cases. Seems that Lynn Patrick made the mistake of hitting Johnny Mowers, the Wing goalie, in the mushky with a line-drive disc in the first game of the season. It knocked out four teeth and cut like an axe.

Since that time, Mowers broke the record-breaking Rangers' scoring streak by shutting them out, 2-0, at 128 scoring games; Jimmy Orlando, Wing defense man, checked Pike so amply that he dislocated Pike's shoulder (immediately after which Pike took a pass from broken-handed Phillip Watson and got one past Mowers.)

The Rangers' victory over the Wings in Detroit on Christmas Day ended a 10-game Wing winning streak and marked their first loss of a Christmas Day game in Detroit in seven years. In the first Ranger-Wing game Karl Liscombe scored seven points, three goals and four assists, to beat Pete Lepine's 13-year-old record. In other words, something usually happens when these two clubs face off, and there isn't any reason to believe it won't happen tomorrow night. A full house would produce nearly $20,000 for the charity.

Hockey's goal for charity this year is $250,000, with the Bruins and Blackhawks taking the lead. The Bruins, controlled by Charles F. Adams, have staged two charity shows and will provide another. The Blackhawks, headed by Frederic McLaughlin, plan a couple. The number of charity games played is a matter left to individual teams. Most of the clubs are controlled by numberless stockholders, whose permission must be gained before giving away a night's receipts, but, at that, a lot of fine work has been and will be done.

Crowds at Ranger games have held up surprisingly well this year, in view of the fact that the club is having a lot of headaches. Boucher lays it to injuries and enlistments.

"We lost 14 men from last year's club to the armed forces of Canada and the States," he told us. "Fourteen good ones, too. Lester Patrick could make up a pretty darn good team from among those men . . . Jim Henry, Art Coulter, Muzz Patrick, Bill Juzda, Neil and Mac Colville, Alex Shibicky, Norm Burns, Norm Tustin, Hub Macey, Allan Kuntz, Lyn Bend, Joe Bell and Bill Gooden . . . I think we could get in the play-offs with that squad."

"Play-offs!" shouted Watson, a distinguished dialectician, as he poised his split hand over a split infinitive in the typewriter. "With those we win, by damn."

Boucher expects that the new Canadian law drafting married men with dependents in the 19-to-25-year-old class, effective this month, will remove from two to four men from each squad in the league. "I don't wish the minors any tough luck," he said, "but we're going to need a lot of players pretty soon, especially on the American teams. The Canadiens and Maple Leafs can fill out their squads with Canadian defense workers . . . sort of one-night stands, but we can't bring much men across the border on account of restrictions."

Pounds Stops by Nats' Office; Suspects Griffith and Bluege

Marietta Park, D. C., January 12.

Dear Boss,

Looks like a plot to keep me away from Florida this winter. I have been getting away with a single punch proposition in recent years, but this winter I had the one-two prepared. First I was going to use the old horse racing technique and if that failed I was going to fall back on the trying out for the Washington Ball Club gag. After all, if I couldn't get to Miami with the bangtails it wouldn't have been so bad to loll around Orlando with the Nats.

HAIGHT

Well, the skids were knocked from under Florida racing and then came that order about no ball clubs training south of the Potomac River. I had thought of suggesting that I be sent to New Orleans for the racing, but something happened this afternoon that changed my plans.

I stopped by the Nats' office. If I couldn't go to Florida I at least could look at those palm trees in the training camp pictures or hear some Florida talk.

As usual I was late for lunch and early for pinochle.

President Griffith and Manager Bluege had their heads together at the other end of the room. Arch McDonald was telling me a moron story. I kept one eye on Griff and Ossie, kinda expecting my appearance might be the cause of some giveaway. Finally Bluege nodded toward me and then Griff turned and looked my way.

I pretended that I wasn't paying any attention, but I thought I heard Bluege say something about, "I'll bet he's 14-y in the draft, too."

Now ordinarily, Boss, when two men are talking and one calls the other's attention to me, they laugh. But Griff and his new manager were dead serious. You know last year, I signed a contract for a tryout with the Washington club. I even went to Florida and tried to get in shape. Well, Griff didn't send me word to report so I kept on working for you—and where did the Nats finish?

Last winter, Boss, I had Shirley Povich arrange for those pictures with Griff and Bucky Harris at the ball park. If there are any ball park pictures this year they will have to ask me. If there is any contract signing, I'm going to see that it is at my figure (Perhaps I should leave out that reference to 'my figure' and make it 'my terms.')

Anyway, I believe Griff would like to sign me. It would be tough luck at that, Boss. I try to get to Florida with the ball club and if they train at Maryland University I'll be losing ground.

I'll give Griff and Bluege credit. They didn't show their hands yesterday, but they did hint around. Griff asked in a half-interested sort of a way, "What are you going to do, Haight, if they call off all races?" I wasn't a fool, either, so I said, "I guess they can hunt up something for me to do at The Post, like sitting on piles of papers on windy days."

Bluege also got in a couple of licks. "Do you do much walking?" he asked. "You know, a man is as good as his legs." I could have told him I walked a lot. When I was a kid and played

Ed Gustafson Leads Rally In Triumph

Special Dispatch to The Post

Chapel Hill, N. C., Jan. 13.—George Washington's Colonials made it three straight over North Carolina opposition when they defeated the U. S. Navy Preflight Cloudbusters here today, 47 to 45, before 2500 fans, mostly cadets and officers.

Although the visitors led for most of the game, they were never ahead by more than five points, and a spirited rally in the last five minutes gave the Cloudbusters a 41-to-40 lead, their first of the second half.

At this point Ed Gustafson, who scored 11 points, came through with a long one followed by a crip, and the Colonials went ahead to stay that way until the final whistle.

Gus Broberg, former Dartmouth captain, led the scoring for both clubs with 14 points; five field goals and four foul shots. Caldwell of the Cloudbusters and Rausch of the Colonials were next with 12.

Like the Carolina-George Washington game of last night, play was slow throughout the first period. After 13 minutes the score stood at 11-11, both clubs looking bad on their passing and follow-ups. Halftime score gave the visitors a 22-19 lead.

Penn Defeats Maryland in Thriller, 51-49

By the Associated Press

Philadelphia, Jan. 13. — The University of Pennsylvania, meeting its stiffest collegiate opposition of the season, defeated the University of Maryland in a basketball game here tonight, 51 to 49.

The Blue and Red, trailing 26 to 16 early in the second half, suddenly burst loose in a rally that sent the Marylanders down to their first defeat of the season.

Penn boosted its winning streak to five in a row. Maryland missed 16 free tosses.

Larry Davis, junior guard, started the rally by chalking up five consecutive points on a foul and two long range set shots, and Davis capped his performance by looping in the goal that put the Quakers ahead at 29 to 28.

Eagles Stage Hot Hand, Beat Balto., 55-36

American University's five iron men, hard pressed to hold a two-point advantage over the University of Baltimore with six minutes to play, suddenly clicked with George Zuras and Bart Fugler showing the way and beat the visitors, 55 to 36, last night in the Eagles' gym.

Zuras, who took over the collegiate scoring in the District, led the late spurt with a 15-point total in the second half and 23 for the night. He trailed his teammate, Fugler, however, as the latter couldn't miss from the pivot spot and tossed in 10 field goals and 4 fouls for 24 points.

Six-foot-six Paul Oberhaus, the Baltimore captain, was the night's leading scorer, however, with 26 points, 16 of them in the second half, when the entire Baltimore team scored but 20.

American was ahead, 24 to 16, at the end of a spotty first half, but Oberhaus pecked away at the lead until with six minutes to play, his team trailed only 34 to 32. Here A. U. took time out and came back with 10 straight points.

Dusek Tosses Yellow Mask

Ernie Dusek defeated the mysterious Yellow Mask after 21 murderous minutes of the feature wrestling match at Turner's Arena last night, and then the principals teamed with Referee Casey Berger to wage seven more minutes of brawling which put the main event to shame. Police finally cleared the ring to the intense satisfaction of some 1200 fans to get to the poor man's Rose Bowl.

Several minutes prior to the finish, Mr. Mask was awarded the match when he pinned Dusek, but the arbiter rightfully reversed the verdict upon discovering that the Nebraskan was out of bounds. This was most displeasing to the hooded fellow and that worthy then really launched upon a career of spreading misery. He gouged and choked Dusek and came up with more kicks than a disgruntled landlord. However, Dusek lived up to his reputation and returned the abuse in full measure, even after surviving two Cobra Clutch holds of the Mask's.

Brother Rudy Dusek and burly Max Krauser went to a half-hour draw in the semiwindup. This engagement featured some choice slugging that rocked the traffic lights up on Florida Avenue.

Johnny Long and Irish Jack Kelly waged a stalemate in a match which was almost captured by Kelly in the final half minute. The Irishman picked up Long for an airplane spin, but was like the farmer and the bull—he had hold and couldn't turn loose. The opener was won by massive Henri Piers in 15 minutes at the expense of one Tom George, a rotund newcomer.—OSCAR ELDER.

Gettysburg Defeats Navy in Upset, 39-37

By the Associated Press

Annapolis, Md., Jan. 18.—Breaking a tie in the last half minute, the Gettysburg Bullets chalked up two points to defeat the Navy, 39 to 37, for its third straight win of the season this afternoon.

This was the Middies' first loss in two games.

Navy's first team started fast and scored seven points in the first eight minutes of play. The Bullets then went ahead, led by Vinnie Parnell, to take the lead, 11 to 7.

An entire new team was run in by Navy at this point, and until the end of the first half, and the score went to 24-16 as Luke Lynch countered twice to spark this spurt. Parnell scored for the Bullets on a long shot and Cal Welliver made his foul shot good to make the score 24-19.

Lynch made two more good shots. The score: 28-19.

Gettysburg started moving, caging 11 points in succession to take the lead, 30-29, and held this one point lead until, with three minutes remaining, Bob Lindsley scored two foul shots. The score stood—Navy, 37; Gettysburg, 36.

Don Freedman's foul shot tied the score, and with a half minute remaining Welliver scored on a sleeper play to win the game, 39-37.

No Sam Baugh On Pro Team; Who's Crazy?

National League 'Official' Team Makes Excuses

By Merrell W. Whittlesey
Post Staff Writer

The National Pro Football League made bums of nine sports writers by releasing an alleged all-league team without the Redskins' Sammy Baugh, an obvious choice for any all-league, all-star, all-pro or all-anything team ever published. The team was released for afternoon papers of Wednesday, a fact ignored by a Washington morning paper (not The Post).

One sportswriter was picked from each league city, the usual custom, and this year the writer served on the committee.

The league handout explained Baugh missed first team selection when the committee split its ballot, some of the selectors placing him at halfback and some at quarter back. Instead of combining the votes the league stuck strictly to the letter and omitted Mr. Forward Pass from the team.

Although the league asked the players to be named to the positions they played all season, as far as possible, the writer moved Baugh to quarter back in order to name what we thought was the best possible team.

Baugh was called a halfback but he performed a quarterback's duties. With Sam at quarter that left Cecil Isbell and Bill Dudley for halfbacks and Gary Famiglietti of the Bears, at fullback. In placing Baugh at halfback, Sid Luckman would earn the quarterback's position and with Baugh and Luckman on the same team that left an unbalanced backfield as they both perform exactly the same duties. That also would have shoved Isbell to the second team.

Thus we thought a backfield of Baugh at quarter, Isbell and Dudley at half, and Famiglietti at full would be much better than Luckman at quarter, Baugh and Dudley at half and Famiglietti at full.

Bob Masterson and Willie Wilkin of the champion Redskins, made the first team but in another surprise none of the Redskin guards were named. This department selected Dick Farman and the Bears' Danny Fortmann at guard. Baugh was also omitted from the team last year.

Marital Rift Fixed, Yank Star States

By the Associated Press

Reno, Jan. 13.—Joe DiMaggio, the American League's great baseball player, reported today he planned to join the armed forces and, at the same time, disclosed he and his pretty wife Dorothy had patched their marital differences.

Arm in arm and smiling happily, the New York Yankee outfielder and his wife, the former Dorothy Arnold of radio and night club singing prominence, said they solved their marital problems about the time she had completed legal residence in Reno for a contemplated divorce.

"We're very happy about it," said Mrs. DiMaggio.

"Everything is straightened out" grinned Joe, winner of batting championships and most valuable player awards in the American League.

"I'm going to try to get into the armed forces in the near future, just as soon as I can get a few things straightened out," continued Joe. "I really don't know which branch I'll try for but I'll be in something pretty soon."

They have an infant son, 14½ months old, Joseph 3d.

The decision to enter the armed forces means the Yankees, last year's league champions defeated in the World's Series by the St. Louis Cardinals, will lose their greatest star.

DiMaggio joined the Yanks in 1935 from the San Francisco Seals of the Coast League.

Married and with a child, he has had a deferred classification of 3-A. Reportedly drawing a baseball salary of about $40,000, Joe has invested in such San Francisco enterprises as a restaurant which he operated in association with his older brother, Tom.

Joe may enlist in a naval branch. He comes from a family of fishermen and was reared in the atmosphere of the sea. His younger brother, ominic, a star outelder with the Boston Red Sox, enlisted last year in the Coast Guard.

Pete Reiser Latest Dodger Star to Join Uncle Sam's Forces

Outfielder Passes Army Physical Test

Enters Service As Buck Private; Reported Having Double Hernia

By the Associated Press

St. Louis, Jan. 13.—Another baseball star became a buck private on Uncle Sam's team today as Harold Patrick (Pete) Reiser was sworn into the Army at Jefferson Barracks.

The 22-year-old Brooklyn centerfielder and heavy hitter passed his physical examination and was accepted for general service. He will be inducted a week from today after the usual seven-day furlough.

Reiser was recently reported suffering from a double hernia but a medical officer at the reception center said examinations showed him to be physically fit.

"Well, this is it," Reiser smiled as photographers prepared to picture him taking the oath.

His only other comment was, "Gee, it's a nice day—could play baseball today."

He was sworn in with a group of about 75 other men, mostly from rural areas in Missouri.

Because of family dependents Reiser, who was married less than a year ago, was classified 3-A until shortly before Christmas when he was changed to 1-A. His Brooklyn draft board then certified his case to a St. Louis board, as Reiser and his wife were living at the home of her parents here.

Pounds Stops By Ball Park And Gets Idea

on "The Little Potatoes. We're Hard to Peel." I led the team on getting bases on balls. But I just replied nonchalantly, "I get around."

On second thought, Boss, maybe that Bluege isn't so keen about me being around the club after all. He's a third baseman and so am I. I'm always getting in trouble that way. Take when I went to training camp with the Redskins. Didn't I run right into Andy Farkas?

Tell the truth, Boss, I'm far from a novice around third, at that. I used to back up Eddie Foster in the Nats' practice when Bluege was swinging on a gate. Foster gave me one of his old baseball suits along about 1912 and I slept in it for the next five nights.

All the papers ran big stories about the major league clubs training near home. You would think that was something new. Why, the Little Potatoes trained for four seasons at Sixteenth and V Streets. And there's nothing sensational about the fact that the Nats are going to work out inside when the weather is bad. The Little Potatoes had indoor training in the big living room over our store one afternoon when my mother was out. Nobody would have known the difference, either, if Jim Mooney hadn't hit a line drive that carried away the left ear of Grandpa Haight's portrait on the rightfield wall.

As ever,
POUNDS HAIGHT.

P. S.—Bluege is getting a little gray.

New Haven Suspends Hockey for Duration

By the Associated Press

New York, Jan. 13.—The New Haven Eagles, of the American Hockey League, today decided to suspend operations Monday as the result of the falling off of attendance due to the ban on pleasure driving in the Atlantic Seaboard States.

Maurice Podoloff, president of the league, said the circuit would make an effort to find another location for the club but declined to mention any of the cities that were being considered.

In event no site is found for the club, the players will be alloted to other members of the league in reverse order of their standing.

Podoloff said the Eagles would play in Washington Saturday and then meet Providence at home Sunday. The club's remaining dates will be taken up by the other teams.

"The New Haven arena is not convenient to transportation," said the president, "with the result the attendance has declined greatly. The Hershey, Pa. problem also was considered but the club officials decided to continue operations."

St. John's uncorked a second-half rally to down Coolidge's inter-high quint yesterday at Coolidge gym, 33-23, led by the Johnnies' scoring aces, George Hughes and "Sleepy" Thompson.

In the third period, Coach Andy Farkas' big guns found the range and the Cadets took command, never again to be headed. Addie Bassin, with 10 points, and Greenbaum with 7, topped Coolidge scoring, while Thompson and Hughes shared 21 of the Cadet total.

Riders Swamp Little Hoyas

After three successive setbacks the Roosevelt High quintet won its first game of the season yesterday by overpowering a weak Georgetown Prep five, 51-21.

Billy Garner put in a layup for the Riders in the first minute of play and Ollie Kennedy and Charley Howard followed suit to give them a lead which was never threatened. Roosevelt had a 14-0 advantage before Nick Nicolades dumped a long shot through for the Little Hoyas. Roosevelt lead at the end of eight minutes 22-2 and with the second and third teams playing most of the second period had increased it to 32-4 at the intermission.

Hoya-Catholic Meeting Recalls Past Records

Catholic University grads will be looking back some 15 years when the Cardinals meet Georgetown University Saturday night, the first court meeting in the history of the cross-town schools.

Back in the middle 1920's, C. U. had won 19 and lost 2 and the Hoyas had won 13 and lost 1 and the fans clamored for a game to decide the city title, but it never took place. One reason was a small riot following a game between the C. U. Frosh and Georgetown Prep.

The Hoya game will be the first since before the holidays for the Cardinals, who have won two and lost two. Georgetown has won eight out of nine and will rule a prohibitive favorite.

Lions Host to Indianapolis

Bridegroom Frank Mailley, iron-man defenseman of the Washington Lions, will be honored with a testimonial tonight when the Washington Lions entertain the Indianapolis Capitals at Uline Arena at 8:30 o'clock

Time out will be taken between the second and third periods when teammates and Uline Arena officials present the Malleys with wedding gifts which will be accepted by the attractive Mrs. Frank Mailley, the former Charlotte Hollar.

Mailley has played four complete matches of 60 minutes each and has set a new American League record by averaging over 50 minutes to the match since shifting from the forward line to defense in early season.

Capt. Lou Trudel will make tonight's presentation in behalf of the players while Owner Michael J. Uline will act in behalf of the Arena.

The Caps have won three of four previous matches from Washington and subjected the locals to bad physical beatings in two of these starts.

—With CONSIDINE

New York, Jan. 13 (INS).—We've got a fine charity sports event scheduled for Madison Square Garden tomorrow night. It's the Rangers vs. the Detroit Red Wings, a regular league game between two of the loop's bitterest foes, and all the moo goes to the Red Cross. Even the players will pay to get in.

CONSIDINE

"It's the perfect charity, for us," Frank Boucher, coach of the Rangers, remarked yesterday, as he recuperated in the Rangers' office from numerous spiritual wounds. "We need some first-aid." He cocked a thumb across the room where sat Phillip Watson, the eminent Scotch-French-Canadian, painfully typing a letter with his good left hand and the single finger which sticks out of the cast on his broken right hand.

"Then we've got Gordon Davidson, with both eyes darned near closed and a nine-stitch wound over one of them just healing; Al Pike, with a football for a knee; Bryan Hextall, with a black eye down to his chin, and a few others. But, of course, it could be worse." He didn't say how.

The Rangers-Wings rivalry is developing into something that promises to decimate seriously Canada's manpower. This charity game will be their sixth meetings of the year. Each one has produced fireworks and hospital cases. Seems that Lynn Patrick made the mistake of hitting Johnny Mowers, the Wing goalie, in the mushky with a line-drive disc in the first game of the season. It knocked out four teeth and cut like an axe.

Since that time, Mowers broke the record-breaking Rangers' scoring streak by shutting them out, 2-0, at 128 scoring games; Jimmy Orlando, Wing defense man, checked Pike so amply that he dislocated Pike's shoulder (immediately after which Pike took a pass from broken-handed Phillip Watson and got one past Mowers.)

The Rangers' victory over the Wings in Detroit on Christmas Day ended a 10-game Wing winning streak and marked their first loss of a Christmas Day game in Detroit in seven years. In the first Ranger-Wing game Karl Liscombe scored seven points, three goals and four assists, to beat Pete Lepine's 13-year-old record. In other words, something usually happens when these two clubs face off, and there isn't any reason to believe it won't happen tomorrow night. A full house would produce nearly $20,000 for the charity.

Hockey's goal for charity this year is $250,000, with the Bruins and Blackhawks taking the lead. The Bruins, controlled by Charles F. Adams, have staged two charity shows and will provide another. The Blackhawks, headed by Frederic McLaughlin, plan a couple. The number of charity games played is a matter left to individual teams. Most of the clubs are controlled by numberless stockholders, whose permission must be gained before giving away a night's receipts, but, at that, a lot of fine work has been and will be done.

Crowds at Ranger games have held up surprisingly well this year, in view of the fact that the club is having a lot of headaches. Boucher lays it to injuries and enlistments.

"We lost 14 men from last year's club to the armed forces of Canada and the States," he told us. "Fourteen good ones, too. Lester Patrick could make up a pretty darn good team from among those men . . . Jim Henry, Art Coulter, Muzz Patrick, Bill Juzda, Neil and Mac Colville, Alex Shibicky, Norm Burns, Norm Tustin, Hub Macey, Allan Kuntz, Lyn Bend, Joe Bell and Bill Gooden . . . I think we could get in the play-offs with that squad."

"Play-offs!" shouted Watson, a distinguished dialectician, as he poised his split hand over a split infinitive in the typewriter. "With those we win, by damn."

Boucher expects that the new Canadian law drafting married men with dependents in the 19-to-25-year-old class, effective this month, will remove from two to four men from each squad in the league. "I don't wish the minors any tough luck," he said, "but we're going to need a lot of players pretty soon, especially on the American teams. The Canadiens and Maple Leafs can fill out their squads with Canadian defense workers . . . sort of one-night stands, but we can't bring much men across the border on account of restrictions."

Ed Gustafson Leads Rally In Triumph

Special Dispatch to The Post

Chapel Hill, N. C., Jan. 13.—George Washington's Colonials made it three straight over North Carolina opposition when they defeated the U. S. Navy Preflight Cloudbusters here today, 47 to 45, before 2500 fans, mostly cadets and officers.

Although the visitors led for most of the game, they were never ahead by more than five points, and a spirited rally in the last five minutes gave the Cloudbusters a 41-to-40 lead, their first of the second half.

At this point Ed Gustafson, who scored 11 points, came through with a long one followed by a crip, and the Colonials went ahead to stay that way until the final whistle.

Gus Broberg, former Dartmouth captain, led the scoring for both clubs with 14 points, five field goals and four foul shots. Caldwell of the Cloudbusters and Rausch of the Colonials were next with 12.

Like the Carolina-George Washington game of last night, play was slow throughout the first period. After 13 minutes the score stood at 11-11, both clubs looking bad on their passing and follow-ups. Halftime score gave the visitors a 22-19 lead.

Penn Defeats Maryland in Thriller, 51-49

By the Associated Press

Philadelphia, Jan. 13. — The University of Pennsylvania, meeting its stiffest collegiate opposition of the season, defeated the University of Maryland in a basketball game here tonight, 51 to 49.

The Blue and Red, trailing 26 to 16 early in the second half, suddenly burst loose in a rally that sent the Marylanders down to their first defeat of the season.

Penn boosted its winning streak to five in a row. Maryland missed 16 free tosses.

Larry Davis, junior guard, started the rally by chalking up five consecutive points on a foul and two long range set shots, and Davis capped his performance by looping in the goal that put the Quakers ahead at 29 to 28.

Eagles Stage Hot Hand, Beat Balto., 55-36

American University's five iron men, hard pressed to hold a two-point advantage over the University of Baltimore with six minutes to play, suddenly clicked with George Zuras and Bart Fugler showing the way and beat the visitors, 55 to 36, last night in the Eagles' gym.

Zuras, who took over the collegiate scoring in the District, led the late spurt with a 15-point total in the second half and 23 for the night. He trailed his teammate, Fugler, however, as the latter couldn't miss from the pivot spot and tossed in 10 field goals and 4 fouls for 24 points.

Six-foot-six Paul Oberhaus, the Baltimore captain, was the night's leading scorer, however, with 26 points, 16 of them in the second half, when the entire Baltimore team scored but 20.

American was ahead, 24 to 16, at the end of a spotty first half, but Oberhaus pecked away at the lead until with six minutes to play, his team trailed only 34 to 32. Here A. U. took time out and came back with 10 straight points.

Gettysburg Defeats Navy in Upset, 39-37

By the Associated Press

Annapolis, Md., Jan. 18.—Breaking a tie in the last half minute, the Gettysburg Bullets chalked up two points to defeat the Navy, 39 to 37, for its third straight win of the season this afternoon.

This was the Middies' first loss in two games.

Navy's first team started fast and scored seven points in the first eight minutes of play. The Bullets then went ahead, led by Vinnie Parnell, to take the lead, 11 to 7.

An entire new team was run in by Navy at this point, and until the end of the first half, and the score went to 24-16 as Luke Lynch countered twice to spark this spurt. Parnell scored for the Bullets on a long shot and Cal Welliver made his foul shot good to make the score 24-19.

Lynch made two more good shots. The score: 28-19.

Gettysburg started moving, caging 11 points in succession to take the lead, 30-29, and held this one point lead until, with three minutes remaining, Bob Lindsley scored two foul shots. The score stood—Navy, 37; Gettysburg, 36.

Don Freedman's foul shot tied the score, and with a half minute remaining Welliver scored on a sleeper play to win the game, 39-37.

Dusek Tosses Yellow Mask

Ernie Dusek defeated the mysterious Yellow Mask after 21 murderous minutes of the feature wrestling match at Turner's Arena last night, and then the principals teamed with Referee Casey Berger to wage seven more minutes of brawling which put the main event to shame. Police finally cleared the ring to the intense satisfaction of some 1200 fans to get to the poor man's Rose Bowl.

Several minutes prior to the finish, Mr. Mask was awarded the match when he pinned Dusek, but the arbiter rightfully reversed the verdict upon discovering that the Nebraskan was out of bounds. This was most displeasing to the hooded fellow and that worthy then really launched upon a career of spreading misery. He gouged and choked Dusek and came up with more kicks than a disgruntled landlord. However, Dusek lived up to his reputation and returned the abuse in full measure, even after surviving two Cobra Clutch holds of the Mask's.

Brother Rudy Dusek and burly Max Krauser went to a half-hour draw in the semiwindup. This engagement featured some choice slugging that rocked the traffic lights up on Florida Avenue.

Johnny Long and Irish Jack Kelly waged a stalemate in a match which was almost captured by Kelly in the final half minute. The Irishman picked up Long for an airplane spin, but was like the farmer and the bull—he had hold and couldn't turn loose. The opener was won by massive Henri Piers in 15 minutes at the expense of one Tom George, a rotund newcomer.—OSCAR ELDER.

No Sam Baugh On Pro Team; Who's Crazy?

National League 'Official' Team Makes Excuses

By Merrell W. Whittlesey
Post Staff Writer

The National Pro Football League made bums of nine sports writers by releasing an alleged all-league team without the Redskins' Sammy Baugh, an obvious choice for any all-league, all-star, all-pro or all-anything team ever published. The team was released for afternoon papers of Wednesday, a fact ignored by a Washington morning paper (not The Post).

One sportswriter was picked from each league city, the usual custom, and this year the writer served on the committee.

The league handout explained Baugh missed first team selection when the committee split its ballot, some of the selectors placing him at halfback and some at quarter back. Instead of combining the votes the league stuck strictly to the letter and omitted Mr. Forward Pass from the team.

Although the league asked the players to be named to the positions they played all season, as far as possible, the writer moved Baugh to quarter back in order to name what we thought was the best possible team.

Baugh was called a halfback but he performed a quarterback's duties. With Sam at quarter that left Cecil Isbell and Bill Dudley for halfbacks and Gary Famiglietti of the Bears, at fullback. In placing Baugh at halfback, Sid Luckman would earn the quarterback's position and with Baugh and Luckman on the same team that left an unbalanced backfield as they both perform exactly the same duties. That also would have shoved Isbell to the second team.

Thus we thought a backfield of Baugh at quarter, Isbell and Dudley at half, and Famiglietti at full would be much better than Luckman at quarter, Baugh and Dudley at half and Famiglietti at full.

Bob Masterson and Willie Wilkin of the champion Redskins, made the first team but in another surprise none of the Redskin guards were named. This department selected Dick Farman and the Bears' Danny Fortmann at guard. Baugh was also omitted from the team last year.

Marital Rift Fixed, Yank Star States

By the Associated Press

Reno, Jan. 13.—Joe DiMaggio, the American League's great baseball player, reported today he planned to join the armed forces and, at the same time, disclosed he and his pretty wife Dorothy had patched their marital differences.

Arm in arm and smiling happily, the New York Yankee outfielder and his wife, the former Dorothy Arnold of radio and night club singing prominence, said they solved their marital problems about the time she had completed legal residence in Reno for a contemplated divorce.

"We're very happy about it," said Mrs. DiMaggio.

"Everything is straightened out" grinned Joe, winner of batting championships and most valuable player awards in the American League.

"I'm going to try to get into the armed forces in the near future, just as soon as I can get a few things straightened out," continued Joe. "I really don't know which branch I'll try for but I'll be in something pretty soon."

They have an infant son, 14½ months old, Joseph 3d.

The decision to enter the armed forces means the Yankees, last year's league champions defeated in the World's Series by the St. Louis Cardinals, will lose their greatest star.

DiMaggio joined the Yanks in 1935 from the San Francisco Seals of the Coast League.

Married and with a child, he has had a deferred classification of 3-A. Reportedly drawing a baseball salary of about $40,000, Joe has invested in such San Francisco enterprises as a restaurant which he operated in association with his older brother, Tom.

Joe may enlist in a naval branch. He comes from a family of fishermen and was reared in the atmosphere of the sea. His younger brother, ominic, a star outelder with the Boston Red Sox, enlisted last year in the Coast Guard.

Pounds Stops by Nats' Office; Suspects Griffith and Bluege

Marietta Park, D. C.,
January 12.

Dear Boss,

Looks like a plot to keep me away from Florida this winter. I have been getting away with a single punch proposition in recent years, but this winter I had the one-two prepared. First I was going to use the old horse racing technique and if that failed I was going to fall back on the trying out for the Washington Ball Club gag. After all, if I couldn't get to Miami with the bangtails it wouldn't have been so bad to loll around Orlando with the Nats.

HAIGHT

Well, the skids were knocked from under Florida racing and then came that order about no ball clubs training south of the Potomac River. I had thought of suggesting that I be sent to New Orleans for the racing, but something happened this afternoon that changed my plans.

I stopped by the Nats' office. If I couldn't go to Florida I at least could look at those palm trees in the training camp pictures or hear some Florida talk.

As usual I was late for lunch and early for pinochle.

President Griffith and Manager Bluege had their heads together at the other end of the room. Arch McDonald was telling me a moron story. I kept one eye on Griff and Ossie, kinda expecting my appearance might be the cause of some giveaway. Finally Bluege nodded toward me and then Griff turned and looked my way.

I pretended that I wasn't paying any attention, but I thought I heard Bluege say something about, "I'll bet he's 14-y in the draft, too."

Now ordinarily, Boss, when two men are talking and one calls the other's attention to me, they laugh. But Griff and his new manager were dead serious. You know last year, I signed a contract for a tryout with the Washington club. I even went to Florida and tried to get in shape. Well, Griff didn't send me word to report so I kept on working for you—and where did the Nats finish?

Last winter, Boss, I had Shirley Povich arrange for those pictures with Griff and Bucky Harris at the ball park. If there are any ball park pictures this year they will have to ask me. If there is any contract signing, I'm going to see that it is at my figure (Perhaps I should leave out that reference to 'my figure' and make it 'my terms.')

Anyway, I believe Griff would like to sign me. It would be tough luck at that, Boss. I try to get to Florida with the ball club and if they train at Maryland University I'll be losing ground.

I'll give Griff and Bluege credit. They didn't show their hands yesterday, but they did hint around. Griff asked in a half-interested sort of a way, "What are you going to do, Haight, if they call off all races?" I wasn't a fool, either, so I said, "I guess they can hunt up something for me to do at The Post, like sitting on piles of papers on windy days."

Bluege also got in a couple of licks. "Do you do much walking?" he asked. "You know, a man is as good as his legs." I could have told him I walked a lot. When I was a kid and played

Pete Reiser Latest Dodger Star to Join Uncle Sam's Forces

Outfielder Passes Army Physical Test

Enters Service As Buck Private; Reported Having Double Hernia

By the Associated Press

St. Louis, Jan. 13.—Another baseball star became a buck private on Uncle Sam's team today as Harold Patrick (Pete) Reiser was sworn into the Army at Jefferson Barracks.

The 22-year-old Brooklyn centerfielder and heavy hitter passed his physical examination and was accepted for general service. He will be inducted a week from today after the usual seven-day furlough.

Reiser was recently reported suffering from a double hernia but a medical officer at the reception center said examinations showed him to be physically fit.

"Well, this is it," Reiser smiled as photographers prepared to picture him taking the oath.

His only other comment was, "Gee, it's a nice day—could play baseball today."

He was sworn in with a group of about 75 other men, mostly from rural areas in Missouri.

Because of family dependents Reiser, who was married less than a year ago, was classified 3-A until shortly before Christmas when he was changed to 1-A. His Brooklyn draft board then certified his case to a St. Louis board, as Reiser and his wife were living at the home of her parents here.

on "The Little Potatoes. We're Hard to Peel," I led the team on getting bases on balls. But I just replied nonchalantly, "I get around."

On second thought, Boss, maybe that Bluege isn't so keen about me being around the club after all. He's a third baseman and so am I. I'm always getting in trouble that way. Take when I went to training camp with the Redskins. Didn't I run right into Andy Farkas?

Tell the truth, Boss, I'm far from a novice around third, at that. I used to back up Eddie Foster in the Nats' practice when Bluege was swinging on a gate. Foster gave me one of his old baseball suits along about 1912 and I slept in it for the next five nights.

All the papers ran big stories about the major league clubs training near home. You would think that was something new. Why, the Little Potatoes trained for four seasons at Sixteenth and V Streets. And there's nothing sensational about the fact that the Nats are going to work out inside when the weather is bad. The Little Potatoes had indoor training in the big living room over our store one afternoon when my mother was out. Nobody would have known the difference, either, if Jim Mooney hadn't hit a line drive that carried away the left ear of Grandpa Haight's portrait on the rightfield wall.

As ever,
POUNDS HAIGHT.

P. S.—Bluege is getting a little gray.

Petworth Wins Heurich Title

New Haven Suspends Hockey for Duration

By the Associated Press

New York, Jan. 13.—The New Haven Eagles, of the American Hockey League, today decided to suspend operations Monday as the result of the falling off of attendance due to the ban on pleasure driving in the Atlantic Seaboard States.

Maurice Podoloff, president of the league, said the circuit would make an effort to find another location for the club but declined to mention any of the cities that were being considered.

In event no site is found for the club, the players will be alloted to other members of the league in reverse order of their standing.

Podoloff said the Eagles would play in Washington Saturday and then meet Providence at home Sunday. The club's remaining dates will be taken up by the other teams.

"The New Haven arena is not convenient to transportation," said the president, "with the result the attendance has declined greatly. The Hershey, Pa. problem also was considered but the club officials decided to continue operations."

St. John's uncorked a second-half rally to down Coolidge's inter-high quint yesterday at Coolidge gym, 33-23, led by the Johnnies' scoring aces, George Hughes and "Sleepy" Thompson.

The Johnnies trailed during the first half as Coolidge took a 7-4 lead at the quarter and held on to a 16-14 advantage at the half. In the third period, Coach Andy Farkas' big guns found the range and the Cadets took command, never again to be headed. Addie Bassin, with 10 points, and Greenbaum with 7, topped Coolidge scoring, while Thompson and Hughes shared 21 of the Cadet total.

Riders Swamp Little Hoyas

After three successive setbacks the Roosevelt High quintet won its first game of the season yesterday by overpowering a weak Georgetown Prep five, 51-21.

Billy Garner put in a layup for the Riders in the first minute of play and Ollie Kennedy and Charley Howard followed suit to give them a lead which was never threatened. Roosevelt had a 14-0 advantage before Nick Nicolades dumped a long shot through for the Little Hoyas. Roosevelt lead at the end of eight minutes 22-2 and with the second and third teams playing most of the second period had increased it to 32-4 at the intermission.

Hoya-Catholic Meeting Recalls Past Records

Catholic University grads will be looking back some 15 years when the Cardinals meet Georgetown University Saturday night, the first court meeting in the history of the cross-town schools.

Back in the middle 1920's, C. U. had won 19 and lost 2 and the Hoyas had won 13 and lost 1 and the fans clamored for a game to decide the city title, but it never took place. One reason was a small riot following a game between the C. U. Frosh and Georgetown Prep.

The Hoya game will be the first since before the holidays for the Cardinals, who have won two and lost two. Georgetown has won eight out of nine and will rule a prohibitive favorite.

Transactions on N. Y. Stock Market

By the Associated Press

New York, Jan. 13.—Selected stocks edged higher today in a steady market and only a few leaders fell by the wayside.

Light but persistent investment demand was credited for much of the minor advance, fractional in most cases, but which lifted a handful of shares a point or more.

The advances aggregated enough to counterbalance the scattered losses and raise the Associated Press average of 60 stocks .1 of a point to 42.0. Each division of the average—industrial, rail and utility—showed the gain. Of 757 issues traded, 351 were ahead, 177 lower and the rest unchanged.

Commodity prices still felt the weight of the price ceiling clamped on corn yesterday, wheat at Chicago losing ⅛ to ½ cent a bushel, and corn ½ to ⅞ cent. Cotton at New York slipped 45 to 65 cents a bale. Hogs were steady to 10 cents higher at Chicago, with a top price of $15.10.

Total stock sales yesterday, 632,500 shares; previous day, 633,281; week ago, 554,440; year ago, 610,100; two years ago, 396,580; January 1 to date, 6,134,787; year ago, 6,559,300; two years ago, 6,621,310.

Flynn Innocent In Rape Case, Counsel Says

By the Associated Press

Los Angeles, Jan. 13.—Errol Flynn's attorney told a jury of nine women and three men today the actor was innocent of charges that he raped two teen-age girls.

In his opening statement shortly before the trial was recessed for the day, Jerry Giesler, Flynn's counsel, asserted the defense would show that Betty Hansen, 17-year-old Lincoln, Nebr., girl, was so bent on getting movie roles that she was willing to resort to intimacies to accomplish her purpose.

He denied, however, that the actor raped her at a Bel Air party, as the State charges and as Deputy District Attorney Thomas W. Cochran asserted he was prepared to prove.

Giesler declared Peggy La Rue Satterlee, 16-year-old Hollywood entertianer whom the State charges Flynn raped twice on a yachting trip in August, 1941, was introduced to the actor by her sister, Mickey.

The actor's attorney said he would prove that at the time of the cruise, Peggy and her sister were out of employment and "were living in the apartment of a man about 40 years of age."

"Jail Bait"

When Peggy first met Flynn on his yacht, anchored at the time at Balboa Island, Giesler said it would be testified, the actor referred to her as "J. B." and "S. Q. Q." The former was interpreted as "jail bait" and, the attorney said, Peggy herself recognized the latter as meaning "San Quentin quail."

"She herself knew it meant that if a girl who was under age had an affair with a man it meant he would have to go to jail," he added.

He denied Peggy was raped during the cruise.

Deputy District Attorney Cochran told the jury the State was prepared to show that both the girls were ravished by the defendant. He said he would prove that both were under 18 years of age at the time.

When Flynn entered Peggy Satterlee's stateroom on the occasion of the first alleged attack, Cochran said, she protested that "it is not a very nice thing for a man to come into a lady's room after she has gone to bed," and that when he assertedly persisted in his advances she added, "Why pick on a nice girl?"

"Family Jury"

The jury is composed almost entirely of family men and women.

All the men and five women are parents, two of the men grandparents. Two of the women have relatives working in motion picture studios, another is secretary to a radio network sales manager.

The jurors:

Mrs. Jennie Larson, mother of a married daughter and aunt of a motion picture cameraman.

Mrs. Lena A. Morgan, wife of a mining engineer, mother of two sons and a daughter, ranging from 13 to 21 years of age.

Mrs. Lorene Boehm, young wife of a mining engineer.

Charles Boyd, retired grocer and insurance broker, father of two married daughters, a grandfather with four grandchildren from 10 to 18 years old.

Miss Elaine Forbes, secretary to a National Broadcasting Co. sales manager.

Loren P. Curtis, civil engineer, father of two sons and a daughter, all married, grandfather of six grandchildren, ranging in age from 5 to 20.

Mrs. Ruby M. Anderson, wife of an electric company sales manager, mother of a 5-year-old daughter.

Mrs. Mildred Leahy, wife of a physical education teacher at the University of Southern California, mother of a 17-year-old daughter.

Mrs. Theresa A. Wood, wife of a carpenter at Paramount studio for the last 16 years.

Mrs. Nellie Minear, mother of three sons and a daughter, all grown.

Homer F. Jacobsmeyer, young gas company service man, father of a baby daughter.

Mrs. Georgette Welch, young wife of an aircraft mechanic.

After selection of two alternate jurors, one man and one woman, Deputy District Attorney Thomas Cochran said in his opening statement he would prove that:

Betty Hansen, who alleges she was raped during a party at a swank Bel-Air mansion last September 27, was born in Lincoln, Nebr., September 21, 1925, the daughter of James and Anna Hansen.

Peggy La Rue Satterlee, who claims she was raped twice during a cruise on Flynn's yacht in August, 1941, was born in Dallas, Tex., September 7, 1926, the daughter of William C. and Florence Satterlee.

Defense Attorney Jerry Giesler indicated he would make no opening statement.

Actor in Brown Suit

Flynn today changed his dark blue suit for a brown one before running the gantlet of would-be spectators, mostly women, crowding the Superior Court halls. Neither of the complaining witnesses was in court.

Deputy District Attorney John Hopkins predicted the trial would last about three weeks, with 15 to 20 witnesses to be called. Along those he already has named are Actor Bruce Cabot, Peter Stackpole, photographer for Life Magazine, and Entertainer Lynne Boyer. Cabot and Miss Boyer have been identified as among those present during the party out of which grew Miss Hansen's charges.

During Monday's proceedings, reporters understood Hopkins to say that Charles Boyer, also an actor, would be among the witnesses called. Hopkins said today that it is Lynne Boyer, not the actor, who is to be a witness.

9 Indicted on Fraud Charges In Building of Navy Depot

Attorney General Biddle announced yesterday that a Federal grand jury at Harrisburg, Pa., has returned six indictments which name nine persons and charge conspiracy to defraud, bribery, extortion and theft in connection with the building of a naval supply depot at Mechanisburg, Pa.

The alleged crimes were relatively minor, in a number of instances involving accusations of thefts of property valued at less than $50.

It was in connection with this investigation that United States Commissioner Sidney Friedman charged at Harrisburg early last month that the inquiry had been hamstrung by Wasnington officials. Biddle denied the charge and described them as the "irresponsible statements of an uninformed minor official."

Friedman was called before the jury to explain his charges, and on December 10 the jury reported to Federal Judge Albert L. Watson that his allegations were "untrue and without any foundation in fact."

One indictment returned today charged Paul Lewis Schlintz, Guy Rupp, Walter H. Shaull and William J. Millard with conspiracy to defraud the United States under a law which carries a maximum penalty of two years in prison and $10,000 fine.

Schlintz was described as the equipment rental supervisor and assistant purchasing agent at the project for Brann & Stuart, Inc., of Philadelphia, the prime contractors; Rupp and Shaull as a partnership known as the Central Tractor & Equipment Co. of Lemoyne, Pa., and Millard as a salesman for Central Tractor.

The indictment alleged that Schlintz recommended the purchase of heavy construction equipment without disclosing necessary factors to be considered and was to receive 3 per cent of the total net price of purchase contracts awarded to Central at the project. Schlintz was said in the indictment to have received $3500 from the other three under the agreement.

The second indictment charged Theodore Roosevelt Potts, second vice president of the company, Brann and Stuard and three alleged co-conspirators, who were not named defendants, with conspiring to defraud the Government by submitting "false, fraudulent and collusive bids" on subcontracts.

Named as coconspirators were Claude Roberson, operator of a riding stable at Princeton, N. J., Jack Spencer of Trenton, N. J., and Howard Buckalew of Hamilton Square, N. J. They were alleged to have colluded on contracts for the hiring of riding horses at Mechanicsburg. It was charged that Roberson agreed to pay Potts $3000 on a subcontract of $20,000 for the rental of horses.

A third indictment in three counts charged Thomas Barrett, a master mechanic, with violating the antikickback statute. The charge carries a penalty on conviction of five years in prison and $5000 fine.

Inspector Indicted

A fourth indictment charged Gilbert H. Flail, a civilian construction equipment inspector for the Navy, with seeking a bribe in violation of a statute which provides a maximum penalty of three years in prison and a fine determined by the amount involved in the bribe.

A fifth indictment in two counts charged Charles Hartline and Thomas Barrett with petty thefts of property. The law provides a penalty of five years and $5000 fine on conviction.

A sixth indictment in 11 counts charges Martin Hess Rutt, Jr., with petty thefts of Federal property at the project. The maximum penalty in some cases could be 10 years imprisonment and $10,000 fine.

Massachusetts Officials Linked in Policy Racket

By International News Service

Boston, Jan. 13.—Authorities tonight linked several unnamed "high public officials" in Massachusetts with a 90 million dollar New England gambling syndicate, believed smashed with the arrest of 30 men and four women in Boston raids.

Attorney General Robert T. Bushnell, who involved the public officials without naming them, said the ring specialized in policy and horse race betting.

Police seized Dr. Harry J. Sagansky, Boston dentist who operates the Agawan racetrack, naming him as "master of the East's greatest policy business."

Bushnell said an insurance policy on the life of "one of Massachusetts' most prominent public figures," was found in Sagansky's apartment.

(Representative James Curley (Democrat), and former Governor of Massachusetts, said in Washington that he made Dr. Sagansky beneficiary of an insurance policy as security for a loan of approximately $8500.

("It was a perfectly legitimate transaction," said Curley, explaining that the loan was arranged through "a very dear friend," Daniel Garnett, representative of J. S. Bache, Boston broker.)

Arraigned as police sought to make other arrests in Massachusetts, Connecticut and Rhode Island, Sagansky and the other 33 pleaded innocent. Sagansky and five others were held without bail. Others were released in bail totaling $146,200.

The Federal Diary

By Jerry Kluttz

Appley Slated For Manpower Post

Lawrence Appley is slated to be appointed acting executive director of War Manpower. He's been chief of training at the War Department and more recently he was appointed to head up the U. S. Employment Service. He'll succeed Arthur S. Flemming, who has been on leave from Civil Service Commission. . . . Federal agencies have been ordered from the White House to place Seventh Day Adventists on work schedules that won't interefere with their Saturday worship. War Production is complying by giving them Sunday work. Under no circumstances are the Adventists to be fired if they don't work Saturdays.

Close friends of Ed Flynn, the Democratic chairman, say President Roosevelt cleared his appointment as Ambassador to Australia with none other than Prime Minister Churchill. Flynn is Irish and a large segment of the Australian population is Irish. His friends also say that the paving block deal can be adequately explained. That's why, they say, Flynn insisted on having his name sent to the Senate for confirmation. Postmaster General Frank Walker, it's reported, has agreed to take over the party's reins. However, a bitter scrap is going on over the other party posts. Former Representative Joe Casey of Massachusetts is supported by New Dealers for executive director. If he gets the job, however, a couple of men now slated for party posts are threatening to withdraw

Navy has a plan to make the rooms of employes more livable. It's the "Make Your Room a Home Contest," which is open to all employes. Winners will be given war bonds of $100, $50 and $25. Each employe will be urged to improve his room with a maximum of $25. The USO has made sewing machines available to the girls who want to make curtains and the like. Judging will be made from snapshots before and after. The contest ends February 28. Wives of Navy officials will make suggestions to the roomers. The contest is part of the employe counseling program in charge of Irene C. Gooley.

Revamping Planned

It's now a clear possibility that a joint committee of Congress and the executive department will be appointed to revamp the Classification Act and other pay scales in the Federal service. The plan, proposed in this column, is under discussion in official circles. The overtime pay act expires on April 30. That act already is under fire by postal and other employe groups. Some of the postal representatives will demand that they be divorced from the overtime act and they'll get through Congress a special bill covering only postal employes. These postal people want a flat bonus. They're sure to get wide support.

The method of paying Federal salaries is certain to be investigated by both the Byrd and Ramspeck committees. Meantime, Rear Admiral Charles W. Fisher, director of Navy's shore establishments, has proposed the rewriting of the more than 100 special Federal salary laws into one simple law that would be uniform and understandable. The Fisher plan has been sent to many Federal officials for comment by Assistant Navy Secretary Ralph Bard. Yesterday the National Federation of Federal Employes executive council ended a three-day session by adopting a resolution demanding continuance of the overtime pay principle beyond April 30, but it also wants inequalities in the present system ironed out and a provision for higher salaries in case the cost of living continues to rise.

Hourly employes at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing will be paid overtime on their present rates of pay. Present rates are about 20 per cent higher than former scales. The comptroller general's ruling will mean dollars in the pockets of the hourly workers. Per diem employes at the bureau already are paid overtime and their rates will remain unchanged . . . Howard Vickery has been appointed director of National Housing's central information division. His assistant will be Nat Keith of FHA. Vickery was with HOLC. Bob Smith will stay on at FHA as assistant to the commissioner.

Harold Stevenson, whose million-dollar suggestion won the November Better Government Contest, sponsored by The Post, will be given the honor of naming a liberty ship. His daughter will christen the vessel. Stevenson is chief of the stevedoring section at War Shipping. His suggestion saves approximately $700 on each ship. War Shipping will select one employe who makes a worth-while suggestion each three months to christen a ship . . . Comptroller General Warren has ruled that all employes of War Manpower making $4600 or more are subject to Senate confirmation . . . LETTER: "Why can't ration boards be kept open one or two nights a week for the convenience of Federal workers, who now must take annual leave to work out our troubles?"

Jersey City, N. J. (U.P.).—George Natusch, 29, went to a Y. M. C. A. party and signed his name to what he thought was a raffle slip. Several days later, he was notified of his selection as Jersey City's typical father. The slip was a nomination blank. Natusch, a bachelor, said he plans to marry soon.

Food Prices Show Slight Gain in Year

Survey Discloses Moderate Boost In Scarce Articles Over January, 1942

Although the general cost of living has risen, and many things heretofore available are now off the retail market, a check by The Post yesterday of retail food prices showed that prices, in foods still on the counters, are only slightly higher than at this time last year.

At the same time, the Labor Department reported that District food costs advanced 1.7 per cent between November 17 and December 15, compared with an average rise of 1.2 in other cities of the same size. The report said that food prices are now 17 per cent higher over December 1941.

But in nonstatistical language the food picture then and now is:

Scarce, if not extinct, as far as retail buyers are concerned, are evaporated milk, canned salmon, bacon, lamb, cheaper cuts of beef, and various cheeses, and sirups, according to the grocery store advertisements.

Some Show Increase

Known painfully to all, but still a matter of record, is the increased cost of eggs, butter, flour, soups, where purchasable, and canned fish and meats, again where purchasable.

Using prices of comparable brands and grades of food, it was found that eggs last year were about 39 cents per dozen, and this year are up beyond 48 cents; flour went up from 47 cents for 12 pounds to around 60 cents; butter can be had now for 15 cents a quarter pound; frying chickens are listed this year at about 39 cents per pound, while last year they were, in some places, as low as 25 cents; soups, not those now listed as condensed, went up a few cents; bacon is not found in this year's advertisements.

Comparative Prices

Following are some of the items and their comparative prices: Oranges, last year about 5 pounds for 37 cents, are about the same; coffee increased around 5 cents a pound; beans went up at least 4 cents a can, selling last year for 10 cents the smallest unit and this year for 14 cents; canned corn went up a few cents, with two cans billed for 19 cents last year and this year about 25 cents; tomatoes sold for about 10 cents a can last year and this year for around 14 cents; grapefruit went up, but it was difficult to set a comparative figure on the sliced forms.

Asparagus sells for around 28 cents this year, an increase of 3 cents over last; apples sold in 1941 for 19 cents for 4 pounds and this year the same amount brings 23 cents; rice, lettuce and white onions remained the same and so did most cereals; cottage cheese is no longer listed in the advertisements, while American cheese in the package varied not at all; pork shoulder sold for 23 cents a pound in 1941 and this year for 29 cents; sausage went up from 25 cents per pound to 29 cents; cured hams went up generally 10 cents; mayonnaise increased 2 cents, while white potatoes did not change in price.

Musolit Club Renames Perry W. Howard

The board of governors of the Musolit Club announced last night the selection of Perry W. Howard to succeed himself as president of that organization, and a continuance of its wartime program.

Building Trades Volunteers Asked for OCD Public Works

An appeal for the building trades to come forward with volunteers for public works groups of the Office of Civilian Defense was issued last night by John D. Locher, executive secretary of the Building Trades Council at a meeting of the Public Works groups at Departmental Auditorium last night.

Locher told the gathering that gaps had appeared in the public works ranks through building trades volunteers being shifted to work outside the city. Union secretaries especially were asked to pass on the call for volunteers to their locals.

Also on the program were Col. Lemuel Q. Bolles, executive director of civilian defense, and P. Y. K. Howat, chief of public works for the metropolitan area.

Cafes Must Keep Open During Air Raid Tests

A warning to restaurants not to lock their doors during air-raid tests was issued yesterday by Leslie Rucker, assistant chief air-raid warden. Rucker said such practice was not in accord with providing shelter for those caught on the streets. Capt. C. S. Peterson, executive officer of the D. C. Fire Department, termed it not only a dangerous practice, but a violation of fire regulations.

25 Haley Employes Give Blood to Bank

Haley's Garage, 2020 M Street Northwest, was closed for reasons patriotic yesterday afternoon. Twenty-five employes shut down to make a group blood donation at the District Red Cross Blood Donor Center, Twenty-third and C Streets Northwest.

Old Dominion Offers Service As Experiment

Richmond, Va., Jan. 13.—An offer to restore passenger service on an experimental basis, provided equipment could be obtained, was made by the Washington & Old Dominion Railroad today as the State Corporation Commission completed another hearing and took under advisement the question of ordering such service resumed between Rosslyn and Purcellville.

The hearing today, continued from December 21, was limited to the question of equipment, and in contrast with previous all-day taking of testimony was comparatively brief.

Hard to Obtain

George C. Baggett, vice president and general manager of the railroad, and C. O. Bailey, superintendent of motive power for the line, testified that equipment was hard to obtain. Baggett testified numerous efforts to obtain equipment had been made and that about the only prospect was a two-car unit offered by the Pennsylvania Railroad.

Wilson M. Farr, counsel for the W. & O. D., told the commission the railroad stood by its offer to resume passenger service on an experimental basis, if suitable equipment could be obtained, although the railroad denied that testimony had shown a public need for the service.

Milton E. Diehl, representing the Office of Defense Transportation, said that agency was ready to assist the commission and the railroad in obtaining equipment. He pointed out that the ODT could requisition equipment for one line from another in cases where it was deemed the public interest would be served. He added, however, the prospects for obtaining desired equipment was none too bright.

Full Capacity of 100

Bailey said the two-car unit offered by the Pennsylvania Railroad was of the gasoline-electric type, with a capacity of about 100 passengers if the baggage room were converted to passenger use.

The unit, he said, was found to be too light for use by the Pennsylvania Railroad.

Bailey estimated the equipment was worth about $3500, but testified he had recommended to Baggett to offer as high as $10,000 in an emergency.

The case was continued in November and again last month to give the railroad, the ODT and other interested parties time to study the matter and to determine if equipment could be obtained. The railroad stopped passenger service in April, 1941.

Griffith Says Social Homes Still Have Use

Settlement houses have a "bridge-building function" in the future—to span the gulf between the rich and the poor, to bring together conflicting race groups and religious sects, Dr. Ernest Griffith, former dean of the graduate school of American University, told social workers and civilian defense volunteers here yesterday.

Dr. Griffith, who is vice president of the Council of Social Agencies, discussed the question of whether the day of the settlement house is over at one of Washington's eight such houses, Friendship House, at 219 D Street Southeast.

Part of the purpose of yesterday's luncheon meeting was to give volunteers, who have taken over routine "bit" jobs or are thinking of helping in nursery and settlement work, an idea of the varied things that go on inside the city's settlement houses.

Changing times have brought several developments, Dr. Griffith said, that might point toward the time being ripe for giving settlement houses an "honorable discharge." Government, in its ever-increasing role, has taken over many of the activities once done only by the settlements, he said; also the amateur volunteer, once the mainstay of such social work, has seen his star setting in favor of professional workers, and the working class, for whom the settlement house originally was founded, now has a new articulateness and leadership of its own in national life, he stated.

Functions still belonging to the settlement house, however, as seen by Dr. Griffith, are not inconsiderable. He enumerated its role in research—the opportunity it presents for study toward unearthing the causes of poverty; its function of educating the community in neighborhood living; its duty to develop community leadership, and finally its experimental functions of trying out for the first time and developing welfare programs later taken over by the community.

The saving to the city from this pioneering by settlement houses, showing what experiments work and which are unstable, has been great though no one has ever catalogued it, Dr. Griffith said. If the settlement house can fulfill these functions, it should be able to outlive its oldtime definition as "a place where highbrow roboes congregate and mutually deterioriate for the common good," he said.

Auxiliary Police Bill Fixes Status

McMillan Measure Would Give Aides Duties Like Those Of Regular Force

Legislation to place local auxiliary police on a virtual par with the Metropolitan force was being drafted yesterday by Representative McMillan (Democrat) of South Carolina, member of the House District Committee.

His bill would amend the District blackout law to provide:

1. That auxiliaries be placed on a 24-hour service basis for the duration of the war and six months thereafter.

2. That they be uniformed and authorized to carry arms.

3. That they be given authority to make arrests.

4. That funds be made available, and used, to provide hospitalization for injuries received in voluntary service.

Definitely On Their Side

Announcement that the bill was being prepared placed McMillan definitely on the side of the auxiliary force in its current battle with the Commissioners over the status of its members.

The fight was started through a ruling by Corporation Counsel Richmond B. Keech that the auxiliaries could serve only during blackout and air raid emergencies, and could not make arrests or carry arms. This was followed by an order from the Commissioners abolishing the rank of inspector in the civilian force.

McMillan expressed confidence that his bill would earn the quick approval of Congress.

About Time to Act

"It's about time for us to do something for these auxiliary policemen who are serving as a patriotic duty and without compensation," he declared. "They should have a definite understanding of what they can expect. Personally I would not blame them if they all quit.

"They are trying to protect the people of Washington and the wartime Capital, and should be protected themselves. I will do all that I can to see that they are given adequate hospital care. They have been doing a good job and members of the Metropolitan Police Force give them credit for having given valuable service.

"If we have them on regular service, walking about among the many strangers in town, they can help the regular force by picking up suspicious characters."

McMillan was immediately sent the thanks of the auxiliary police for his aid in a letter from Melvin Foer, newly elected chairman of the Auxiliary Police Association, and Arthur Markel, temporary head of its ways and means committee.

Introduction of the measure, they said, "will enable us to concentrate our efforts in behalf of its passage and to perfect our organization whose sole aim is to render service to the residents of the District of Columbia in these critical times."

"Your prompt action," the letter continued, "has already resulted in increased morale among an auxiliary force that in recent days has been both confused and disconcerted."

Friends Fete Girl Leaving For WAVES

Those who know her best last night said Godspeed to comely Thornton (Thornie) Magruder, prominent youth worker of Francis Asbury Methodist Church, who leaves tomorrow for WAVES training at Smith College, Northampton, Mass.

Members of the Carillon Class, to which "Thornie" belongs, and of the young adult department, of which she is a former president, and other friends feted her at 3002 Porter Street Northwest, where she lives with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. O. G. Magruder, and a brother, John, 12.

The party also was in the nature of a "goodby" to Mrs. Bevan Tucker, Carillon teacher, who is leaving to be near her husband, Marine Lieutenant Tucker of Quantico, Va.

The entire Magruder family is active in Francis Asbury Church, 3146 Sixteenth Street Northwest. "Thornie" is secretary of the junior department in the church school; Mrs. Magruder is nursery department superintendent, and Mr. Magruder is intermediate superintendent.

Both "Thornie" and her mother are native Washingtonians. "Thornie" was graduated from Central High School in 1934, attended Wilson Teachers' College two years, George Washington University one year, and was graduated from Maryland University in 1940. Since graduation, she has been employed in Woodward & Lothrop's magazine department. Her father is a civil engineer.

Defense Setup of District Held Undermanned, Ineffectual

(One of a series.)

The District Civilian Defense organization is still far short of the necessary number of air raid wardens, auxiliary policemen, auxiliary firemen and rescue squad workers to meet an emergency here, although the OCD has been established for 16 months, 13 of which we have been at war.

This situation stems, not from a lack of patriotism or interest on the part of residents here, but from a complicated, top-heavy OCD organization, the retention of unnecessary frills, and an effort to absorb the functions of too many other established groups.

Manpower and womanpower is being wasted on sporadic, ineffectual attempts at social welfare programs, such as a "Share-the-Meat" campaign, a program of housewife instruction that was almost still-born, but which nevertheless drew considerable censure of OCD as a "busybody" outfit.

The amount of duplication of effort of OC and other organizations in the community is appalling, a Post survey shows, in view of the fact that there is legitimate need in the community for war workers.

Part of the duplication stems from the fact that the protective services of OCD, under which come wardens, fire watchers and the like, were set up to handle enemy action. Since there has been no enemy action, there has been a tendency to attempt to hold interest of volunteers by sending them out on all possible occasions, even though other groups are specifically designated for the job.

This is in part behind the now mounting trouble over the auxiliary police here, an organization which has met with the warmest commendation from the regular police. The auxiliaries were expressly created to function in blackouts, but since blackouts have become less frequent, auxiliaries have been called out fo rall sorts of services.

The simple truth of the situation appears to be that any organized group tends to self-perpetuating. If the need which called it into being does not develop, the group will spread over into other fields. Since Hitler has not yet seen fit to bomb Washington, the OCD workers have a tendency to look for some kind of job "to keep going." Some of those jobs are extremely useful, some are not.

This spreading into other fields is the more serious because it is weakening the structure of an organization which may yet be needed for the purposes for which it is created.

Col. Lemuel Bolles, executive director of OCD, said yesterday that the successes by the Army and Navy have caused interest in civilian defense to slacken because people believe that Washington will not be bombed.

Colonel Bolles takes the position that as Hitler's situation becomes more desperate he is more likely to risk an attempt on the United States, for the sake of lifting the morale of the German people, in much the same way as our raid on Tokyo raised the morale here in the dark days.

Washington is the No. 1 psychological target in the country, Bolles asserts. His opinion is shared, The Post learned, by a number of competent military observers.

Leading figures in the OCD setup here admit that if Bolles is right, and Washington does become a target, the whole civilian defense setup is likely to splinter into a thousand pieces, and cease to function, because it has been spread too thinly and diffusely in too many spots. Lest this start a panic, it should be remembered that in such an event the Army would be more than capable of taking over until the creaking, amorphous mass called OCD could be whipped into shape under the lash of necessity.

But the protective services which will be desperately needed, if they are needed at all, are only one-half of this whole OCD picture. The other half is the Civilian Mobilization Division, headed by Conrad Van Hyning. This division devotes its attention to any number of social welfare questions. When Mayor LaGuardia resigned as director of the national Office of Civilian Defense, he recommended that the functions of this Civilian Mobilization Division, now nationally called Citizens War Services, be turned over to existing agencies.

Action Not Taken

This was not done. The Civilian Mobilization Division is the one in which Mrs. Roosevelt was particularly interested, and in connection with which she unloosed such a storm of criticism. The physical fitness section of this division was turned over to the Office of Defense, Health and Welfare under Paul McNutt, but the rest of it has been continued.

It is under this Civilian Mobilization Division that one Washington organization has been teaching massage in the name of civilian defense. It is under this that housewives are told how to "Share the Meat." If there are "Victory Gardens" this year in Washington's backyards, it will be this half of OCD that sponsors them. (In this connection it is worth noting that Agriculture Department is distinctly cool to the idea of inexperienced persons wasting seed.)

District Committee To Consider Bills Aiding Policemen, Firemen, Teachers

The Senate District Committee will hold its first regular session of the new Congress tomorrow to consider pay-raise bills for local police, firemen and school teachers, Chairman Pat McCarran announced yesterday. The meeting is called for 10:30 a. m.

McCarran had previously stated his intention of seeking action on the measures as soon as possible, but has been holding off pending official appointment of the committee. The roster was completed Tuesday, when the Democrats named their membership on the group, and McCarran immediately ordered notices of tomorrow's session sent out.

The two bills, both authored by McCarran, will provide pay boosts for the only District government employes who did not benefit by the Federal overtime pay bill.

The police and fire bill follows the Federal measure in outline, giving a 20 per cent raise on salaries up to $2400. All men in the two departments making more than that would get 20 per cent on that portion of their salaries.

The school teachers' measure would give 15 per cent increases to teachers and certain other school employes, with a 10 per cent raise granted to Board of Education workers on the $3500 portion of their wages.

Producers To Ask Milk Price Increase

Proposed amendments to the District Federal milk marketing order will be presented at a public hearing at 10 a. m. next Monday in the South Agriculture Building Auditorium, the Department of Agriculture said yesterday.

The proposals, initiated by the Maryland and Virginia Milk Producers Association, Inc., call for an increase of 93 cents per hundredweight in the price of Class 1 milk, but would change the classification so as to reduce the amount of milk designated as Class 1. The association represents a large proportion of the producers supplying fluid milk to the Washington area.

These producers contend increases are necessary to maintain or, if possible, increase production so that the growing demands for fluid milk in Metropolitan Washington may be supplied from nearby sources. A report submitted by the association indicated that during the period from January, 1941, to November, 1942, the labor and feed costs of farmers in the Washington milkshed increased 55 per cent and 40 per cent, respectively. The report stated that during the same period, the price received by producers for Class 1 milk increased only 12 per cent.

The association proposes also that milk supplied to the Washington area from plants outside the Washington milkshed be designated as "emergency supplies" and allocated to Class 2, except that any of these "emergency supplies" in excess of the total amount of Class 2 shall be allocated to Class 1.

On the basis of evidence presented at the hearing, the Food Distribution Administration may draft tentative amendments to the marketing order.

12-Yr.-Old Bond Salesman Nets $6000 in 11-Day Campaign

A 12-year-old War Bond salesman has netted the United States $6000 in the first week and a half of his one-man campaign.

STANLEY TEMPCHIN

Stanley Tempchin of 1427 Upshur Street Northwest is a student at W. B. Powell Elementary School and in his spare time he "just visits people to sell bonds."

He has the endorsement of H. L. Rust, jr., chairman of the War Savings bond staff in the District, who praised him for selling $36,000 worth of bonds in one night from the platform of Adas Israel Synagogue.

"From that evening," Stanley said yesterday, "I got the idea to sell some more. If I could sell that much in such a short time I thought I could sell a lot if I started a campaign of my own."

Stanley has a long history of enthusiasms in this field. He wrote a prize essay which still expresses his thoughts on the subject.

"In the kind of world in which we live today America has no choice but to arm, as thoroughly and quickly as possible, to make sure that this country remains secure against aggression and retains our liberty and freedom.

"We are a nation of many tongues, but of one ideal—let's keep that one ideal.

"I appreciate the opportunity to appear before you in behalf of the Stars and Stripes—Let's keep them flying! Help our Government and help yourselves. We need the money to lick the Axis."

Justice Letts was named the officiating magistrate in the marriage license application which was filed last week by Miss Edna Mattox, assistant national director of the Red Cross Home Service.

1250 Books Donated In First Week of Drive

A total of 1250 books were donated to the Victory Book Campaign in the first week of the drive and a large book concern here has promised a donation of 500, it was announced yesterday by Mrs. Philip Sidney Smith, local director.

Brentano's Book Stores promised the large individual contribution and will place containers, otherwise, in its stores to receive contributions from the public.

Mrs. Smith emphasized again that good books in good condition are desired. The campaign is scheduled to close March 5.

Va. Bus Concern Signs First Woman Driver

Miss Beatrice Robinson, 26, of 818 North Stewart Street, Arlington, Va., yesterday became the first woman bus driver in Northern Virginia when she signed up with the Arlington-Fairfax Motor Transportation Co.

She is now undergoing a training course in the handling of buses under John Haines, veteran driver.

E. B. Coxen, secretary of the company, said yesterday that the company will welcome applications from women to meet the increasing demand for drivers.

That Wild Arnold Girl

By Irene Ernhart

The story thus far: Jenny Arnold is regarded by many people, and particularly by her father, as an uncontrollable, spoiled brat. She runs around with a gay and frivolous, but wholly innocent, crowd of young people who have maintained their clique through high school and after graduation. Her brassy modernism is largely due, she knows—as does Bud Nelson—to her fear of ever revealing a true sentiment or emotion. The only time she ever breaks down was after she and Bud, out dancing with their crowd, see Jenny's mother, Celia, in the company of the debonair young dancing master, Tony Torrento. When Jenny gets home her father upbraids her for keeping such late hours, and it is with difficulty that she keeps from telling him about Celia. Jenny is awakened next morning to cope with a group of interior decorators summoned by her sister to do the house over.

Chapter III

Everyone, except the tall dark-headed man by the French windows, looked furious. He turned rather slowly, still quite indifferent. A hint of a smile played about his mouth. His eyes met Jenny's for an instant.

And at the look of those eyes, gray, cool, set in a thin distinguished-looking face, a queer thing happened quite suddenly to Jenny.

Her heart pounded, and her face grew hot. A sudden weakness in her knees, the way her hands turned cold and trembly, made her ashamed and angry.

Why she'd never seen the man before! Why should he make such funny things happen to her? In from his look. "I'll show you the living room now," she said.

Three of them followed her out meekly enough, but the tall man stayed where he was.

"Oh, he's not with us," the woman told Jenny as she looked back. "He was waiting there when we came."

Jenny discussed chair coverings with the fat man absently, and looked at his sketches, all the time thinking, "of all the crazy, idiotic things! To have your throat feel tight and your hands shake just because some man you've never even seen before gives you a straight look. Why it's ridiculous. Maybe you need food, or maybe you didn't get enough sleep last night."

Presently, finished with the decorators, she found herself going back toward the library, quite as if she were drawn there by a magnet.

He was someone to see father, of course, and no one had told him father left early for the office and he was probably impatient by now, wondering why he was being kept waiting.

But the young man was gone! Vanished! Had she only been dreaming?

Then she caught sight of a pair of broad gray shoulders in the garden, heard Briar's sharp ecstatic bark of glee. Opening the French doors, she went out. Instantly Briar's tousled black and white form shot through the hedge and tore in circles about her, barking and leaping in wild frenzy.

"Sh—Briar!" she cried "You'll waken mother. Hush!"

"Your dog?" a low voice asked.

The gray eyes were now amused and friendly.

Again, as she walked across the lawn toward the stranger, she felt that tilting sensation inside her. She smiled, nodded. "Disreputable looking isn't he?"

"Brains and beauty don't always go together, you know." He knelt and scratched Briar's ragged ears.

It was when he looked up at her again and smiled that Jenny knew all at once what had happened to her. Bud Nelson's words came back, ringing in her mind with the queer fatality of a fortuneteller's prophecy come true. "Heaven help you, Jenny, if you ever fall in love. It'll be a storm all right. A real storm."

"Father's at the office," she burst out abruptly to cover her confusion.

The dark head came up again. A quizzical gleam shone in the gray eyes and laughter lines about his mouth trembled.

"That's nice," he said, with an infuriating touch of amusement.

"You—you did come to see father, I suppose?"

He gave Briar a final pat and stood up. How tall he was, and broad and lanky.

"You must be Jenny."

A horrible suspicion chilled her. She nodded without smiling.

The Walkers

The amateurs . . .
Who start out bravely teetering along the sidewalk,
In their high heels and thin rayon stockings,
And who wind up at night,
Soaking their feet in hot water; and who limp around for days,
With bandaged toes and plastered heels,
Telling everybody they don't know how they are going to stand it,
This ban on riding,
Being that they simply can't walk more than a block,
Because they have this extreme sensitivity
In the skin of their feet.

* * * *

The great ladies . . .
Who put on their tweeds and their oxfords and step forth grimly,
For a downtown jaunt scorning to use the streetcar,
Or even the more genteel bus.
Oh no, indeed! For if Mrs. R.
Can sprint a mile and a half from the station,
To the White House, they can do just as much,
"Without any publicity." What is more
They'll show the world and all the half-baked radicals,
That they can take it as well as anybody,
Without a revolution.

* * * *

The big outdoor people . . .
Who stride along with triumphant gleams in their eyes
For this is the day they have long awaited,
The day of retribution!
When all the softies and loafers and dissipated decadents,
Who have been losing the use of their legs and ruining the Nation,
By riding in cars and sitting on their buttocks,
At last have got what is coming to them,
And it serves them right now if they are tottering and blistered,
For if they had lived rightly,
They wouldn't be tenderfeet.

* * * *

The cheerful matrons . . .
Who believe this is really a good thing after all,
Because it will make them do something,
About their figures,
For it's so hard to exercise when you haven't an objective,
And so easy to ride when the car's there at hand,
And another thing, there is the matter of diet!
Why, if women must walk . . . downtown . . . and to meetings . . . and parties,
They will walk off the pounds and more to the point,
Need plenty of food to keep up their strength,
"Please pass the French pastry."

* * * *

The futurists . . .
Who while gasping on streetcars in the non-ardent embraces,
Of strangers suffering from halitosis and club foot,
Make brave resolutions,
That if they ever survive to the end of their journey,
They will on the morning don seven league boots,
And stride forth in blessed enveloping solitude,
Who enthusiastically make engagements with friends and strangers, even with enemies
To walk this place and that, even to hike in the country,
Who loudly protest they will soon be free and out of this mess,
As soon as they get the right outfits, but meanwhile—
"Well why not a taxi?"

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborne

We came across a real smother play recently, reported by Bennett L. Disbrow, Philadelphia bridge champion, which was played by a friend of his in a rubber-bridge game. The magician who created this particular optical illusion was William P. Wood, of Ridley Park, Pa.

The cards and bidding are shown in today's box.

Since South had doubled East's spade bid, West opened a heart instead: the nine was played from dummy, and East's queen won. He returned the club ten, and declarer took the trick with the ace. The king of diamonds was laid down and East discarded, showing the unfortunate trump break.

Now South's doubled contract looked as though it surely would be defeated, for he had two definite heart losers and one seemingly certain trump loser, and East's spade bid indicated that a spade finesse also would lose. But declarer saw one slight possibility of avoiding a diamond loser if the adverse cards were favorably located.

After the first round of trumps, he led the jack of hearts, and East's ace won. East led another club; declarer led the king and continued the queen. Next a small spade was led to North's ace, declarer refusing to finesse, and the heart king was cashed, enabling South to discard the spade jack from the closed hand.

A Smother Setup

East then was put in the lead with the king of spades

East led a spade, South threw off his last club and West was forced to ruff with a small diamond. Declarer overruffed with dummy's six-spot and returned North's last club, which he trumped with the diamond queen. West was obliged to underruff this trick with the five.

Next declarer led the diamond ten, intending to let it ride if West played small, but the jack covered and the last two tricks were taken with the ace and nine of trumps. The defense failed to take a single trump trick and South made four diamonds, doubled, losing two hearts and a spade.

Martha Ellyn's Platter Chatter

Dinners are becoming smaller affairs in these "help wanted" and "little driving" times. But a large sized recipe can be a great help. It means that you can make a quantity and then serve at subsequent meals.

A steamed almond pudding is such a dessert. The following receipe makes 18 to 20 servings. But you can cut down the proportions and make what you need. The recipe for the pudding follows:

STEAMED ALMOND PUDDING

Chop 1 cup blanched almonds medium coarse. Slice 1 cup citron and cut into medium sized pieces. Rinse 1 cup seedless raisins, drain and ry on a towel. Use 2 cups soft white bread crumbs which should be "picked" rather than grated. Cream together ½ cup shortening, ½ cup butter and ½ cup granulated sugar. Add 1/3 cup honey, and 2 tablespoons finely cut fresh orange rind, and beat. Add 3 beaten eggs and 2 cups soft white bread crumbs, and stir to blend. Add ¼ cup milk, and 2½ cups sifted all-purpose flour which has been sifted with 4 teaspoons baking powder, 1 teaspoon salt, 2 teaspoons cinnamon, 1 teaspoon mace and ½ teaspoon cloves. Add almonds, citrons and raisins and stir until well blended. Pour into a greased (1¾ quart size) mold. Cover mold. Place in a kettle containing sufficient boiling water to cover lower ¾ of mold. Cover kettle and boil about 3¾ hours, replenishing water (hot) as needed. Serve hot with a rich pudding sauce. Pudding may be reheated over hot water. Serves 18 to 20.

Mary Haworth's Mail

French-Canadian Woman, Resident of This Country Since the Age of 3, Thinks Her Alien Status Disbars Her From Employment; And She Wants to Work

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am French and speak very little English but I understand what is said. I was born in Canada and I am one of the 16 children who came here with the family when I was 3 years old, to live in a small town in Maine. My husband and I came to Washington to work, it will be seven years next July. I am not a citizen of the United States but wish to become so as soon as I can and I hope very soon. The reason I am writing you is this: I am not working at present and I wish to do my part for the war. When I look for a job, I write on the application and they see that I am not a citizen. They say nothing but I hear nothing from them.

Now what can I do? Where I come from, I was working in the cotton mills. But here they don't have that work. I can sew and I can work in department stores. I did work in a grocer's store and I did work in a linen shop. I am willing to try anything if they will give me a chance. My husband would wish me not to work; but if I do something, I feel better and I want to do something for this war. I am 34 years old and I think for my part I am still young. I have no children and am unable to have any for the rest of my life, but I am very happy with my husband living in this country. I did write this letter all alone and if there are mistakes, I hope you will excuse me. My writing is the best I can do. I shall be looking every day for your answer. Best regards, R. E. L.

Language Difficulty Is the Real Handicap

DEAR R. E. L.: Your penmanship and spelling, the construction of some of your sentences (which I have ventured to organize more clearly), and your incorrect usage of certain words,—such as "done" for "don't," and "thing" for "think,"—suggests that it is not your Canadian citizenship, but your lack of formal schooling in English, plus the fact that you "speak very little English," which handicaps you in getting a "white collar" job in this city. You make what we call "a poor showing," on your written application. Any American citizen who made the same poor showing, at written and spoken English, would have no better luck finding a job that included sales work, some bookkeeping (in filling out sales checks), and meeting the public.

If you were better schooled in English, I am sure you could find work here, while waiting to be naturalized. Various classifications of so-called "aliens," who have the educational qualifications to fill necessary jobs in business or industry, are being employed in this country now. For instance, refugee peoples from Europe, who enter this country under student or visitor classification; and Canadians, too, who have been admitted for permanent residence. You say you want to become an American citizen; very soon, you hope. Have you filed your first papers? If you are the wife of an American citizen,—your first papers would really be "second papers," since, in that case, you would omit the "application to file declaration of intent," and start with the "preliminary petition for naturalization."

Americanization School Would Gladly Help Her

However, my thought in mentioning the filing of first papers, is to ask if you know that persons from other countries, who petition citizenship in the United States, have the privilege of enrolling in citizenship classes, conducted by the Americanization School at Tenth and H Streets Northwest, to receive instruction about our Constitution and form of Government. And for those who lack the necessary educational background to fully understand these instructions, at first, the school gives special courses in the English language. Miss Maude E. Aiton is director of the school. Your 50 per cent mastery of English indicates that you might start in the "intermediate class,"—for those who have some knowledge of the spoken and written word,—and go on to the advanced class, which is devoted to a study of Government. A spokesman for the school told me today that it offers "very splendid classes in English," and encouraged you to take advantage of the opportunity it offers,—to correct your language difficulty and thus improve your chances of finding employment.

The local-naturalization office (which is a branch of the Immigration and Naturalization Service of the Federal Department of Justice), has headquarters in the Hutchins Building at 939 D Street Northwest. And if you go there, to Room 208, to start citizenship proceedings, you will be given a card to the Americanization School,—if you ask for it. And for general information concerning your status as an alien,—for instance, whether your Canadian citizenship does disqualify you for certain kinds of employment,—you would consult the Immigration and Naturalization Service headquarters, which is located in Room 207 of the same building. The telephone number is REpublic 8200. And Mrs. V. T. Benn, of that office, is an extremely efficient and gracious consultant on questions of this kind, by the way. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

SHOP AND RUN

By Marianne

It was fun shopping—fair weather, no holiday crowds, and almost a smell of spring in the air. Sit down and have a look at what we found!

Housewives have gremlins too. They burn pans, make food stick, and discolor enamelware! Heed them not with this new wonder that replaces steel wool. It's a tough bit of fabric that'll clean your aluminum, glass, procelain, dishes, etc., and besides won't rust. Only 5 cents for this junior size pot cleaner.

When a lady's fancy turns to spring, it means inventory of the wardrobe closet. Until you can figure a spring suit into your budget, perk up your winter one with this crisp organdy and lace gilet. Wear it open or closed. $1.25.

It's not patriotic to freeze when you can utilize every bit of heat from your radiators and cut down your fuel bill too. Radiator reflectors behind each radiator will reflect up to 95 per cent of the radiant heat which ordinarily goes to heat up the wall behind your radiator! This reflective paper shield improves air circulation by distributing the heat throughout the room—fine for the room that is "hard to heat." Housewives note, they help to keep curtains and walls cleaner because they take the dust and smoke that otherwise would be carried upward. Shields for 2 radiators, $1.00.

If you've a friend who takes bowling seriously, give him or her this wooden plaque to hang on the wall. Under the picture of ball and duckpins is the "Bowler's Prayer" which goes like this:

"Lord give me grace to bowl a score
So high that even I
When talking of it afterwards
May never need to lie!"

The price is 50 cents.

Here is a big book that makes it fun for young patriotic Americans to save. Called "My Savings Book for Defense Savings Bonds and Stamps," its heavy cardboard pages have slots for pennies, nickels, dimes and quarters. Gay pictures of elephants, dogs and clowns play with the coins and clever poems and writing throughout will also help the young ones to count money. When the book is filled it'll buy defense stamps. Distributed without profit, it's only 10 cents.

Call NAtional 4200 Extension 324 between 9 and 5:30 and we'll tell you where to find them.

Distinctly international in flavor are the series of monthly teas now being inaugurated by the World Woman's Party for Equal Rights. First of these will be Sunday afternoon at international headquarters, Alva Belmont House, 144 B Street Northeast.

GENEVIEVE REYNOLDS

Double purpose—the at homes are planned so that the group may renew friendships begun abroad when the world center was at Geneva and to establish cordial relations among the women of various countries represented in the Nation's Capital. To the latter end—once each month, one of the legations or embassies will be honored at the get-togethers. First on the list are the Yugoslavians.

Mme. Slavko Grouitch, whose late poet-statesman husband—he was the first Yugoslav Minister to the United States—will be the honored guest and speaker Sunday afternoon. Mme. Fotitch, wife of the Ambassador from Yugoslavia will be in the receiving line. With her will be Alice Paul, chairman of the World Woman's Party, and Mrs. Charles McNary, wife of the Oregon Senator.

Members of the District of Columbia Congress of Parents and Teachers will participate actively in the Victory Book Drive by taking their donations to the Founders' Day observance ceremonies, Tuesday, February 16, 1:15 p. m. in the board room of the N. E. A. Building.

Oyez! Oyez! Congratulations are in order for plucky Mrs. Eugene (Edna) Callaghan, president of the VOTELESS D. C. LEAGUE OF WOMEN VOTERS. It's a 7-pound boy—Curtis John Callaghan—born Sunday, January 10, at Doctors Hospital.

Did You Know That . . .

Dr. Clarence Efroymson, economic professor, lived several months in an agricultural colony in Palestine. Reason—to study conditions of communal living. What he saw will be the subject of a talk before members of the SATURDAY EVENING DISCUSSION GROUP, 8:30 p. m., Saturday, Zionist House, 1720 Sixteenth Street Northwest.

The D. C. GIRL SCOUTS are expanding their activities to the new areas mushrooming around Washington, where there are no recreational facilities provided for girls under 14 years old. Decision came after Mrs. Marshall Diggs, a member of the D. C. Council, completed a spot survey to determine the sections that are not being served by the Girl Scouts of some other agency.

In order to facilitate transportation the JUNIOR ALLIANCE will hold monthly meetings at the Y. W. C. A., Seventeenth and K Streets Northwest. This plan was put into effect—will be for the duration—at the luncheon meeting Monday.

Your Figure, Madame!

By Ida Jean Kain

How many steps would you say the housewife takes in the course of getting dinner—550, 1,050, or 3,600? Your guess will depend on the size of your own kitchen. But, according to statistics, the average is exactly 3,696 steps, no more and no less, and they add up to about a mile and a half.

But it's a mistake to think that getting the meals entitles you to any second helpings. You may have to go easy on the first helpings. The calories you burn in energy are no match for those you can stir up in a cake or toss into the frying pan.

If you walk as far in getting dinner as the statistics say you do, you would have to step along at the rate of three and three-fourths miles per hour to burn 350 calories. And if you moved that fast in your kitchen, you'd be running in circles! You probably burn considerably less than that many calories in an hour. Suppose you do bustle about and bake a cake, I doubt that you would use more than 200 calories.

You can get anywhere from 200 to 500 calories in a not unreasonably large piece of cake. Pie comes just as high. A slice 3 inches at the curcumference is in the same calorie range, depending on whether it is apple or mince. Here are the figures:

Cake	Calories
Chocolate layer, 2 inch circumstance	200
Chocolate fudge, 2½ inches square	500
Plain cup cake, without icing	180
Two-egg layer cake, icing, 2½ inch sector	500
Now, Pie
Apple, 3-inch cut	200
Cherry, 3-inch cut	300
Mince, 3-inch cut	500
Pumpkin, 3-inch cut	240
Lemon meringue, 3-inch sector	300

I put dessert first because it usually gives you the most and the extra calories. But you can do quite well before you get to dessert. Fats and fried foods are notorious weight makers. Fats are restricted now and that's a help. Even so, you can easily get from 1500 to 1800 calories in a full dinner.

Cheers For the Fashion Group

By Jeanne Contini

"Isn't that divine? Oh, but how does she sit down in the skirt," or "Picture John's face if I came home in THAT!" were the kind of remarks made at and merited by the old-fashioned fashion show. We've all at one time or another sat, feeling a little patronized, a little awe-struck, a little bewildered by a galaxy of out of this world costumes shown by incredibly thin mannequins. Today that sort of thing is as dated as a gold tooth-pick.

The clothes shown, Monday, at the N. R. D. G. A. (National Retail Dry Goods Association) wartime conference by the New York branch of the Fashion Group, struck a new high in sane and sensible fashion presentation. "War Savings" or saving of material, labor, alterations and time as evidenced by this spring's fashions formed the theme.

According to Estelle Hamberger, commentator, "American clothes will have fashion whether they're uniforms or overalls, business clothes or beau-catcher clothes—even if they have to be made of paper and string."

Although a far cry from that extremity, there was an excellent example of a pared-to-the-bone wardrobe. It consisted of a navy blue suit plus accessories; tidy white pique for business, a pretty hat and blouse for a photogenic Easter, pale pink frills for a successful dinner date, and (wonderful to say) an autumn preview with blouse, gloves, beret and bag, of scarlet. Easy to take, no?

The "Saving Material and Labor" scene high-lighted a knock-out cocoa brown rayon jersey afternoon dress that took exactly 1¾ yards of 50-inch fabric.

A navy dress with bold white areas to stop traffic in a dimout was appropriately displayed in the scene called "Saving Lives."

"Government is the pattern-maker in war time," said Mrs. Anne O'Hare McCormick in her introduction. "Government cuts the cloth and out of the pieces that are left we civilians make our suits."

Us, we'd be delighted with those left-overs.

Maj. Gen. Levin H. Campbell, Jr.

Ordnance Chief Welcomes Order On Production

This is another in a series of stories about the men who are running the war. The next will appear on Monday.

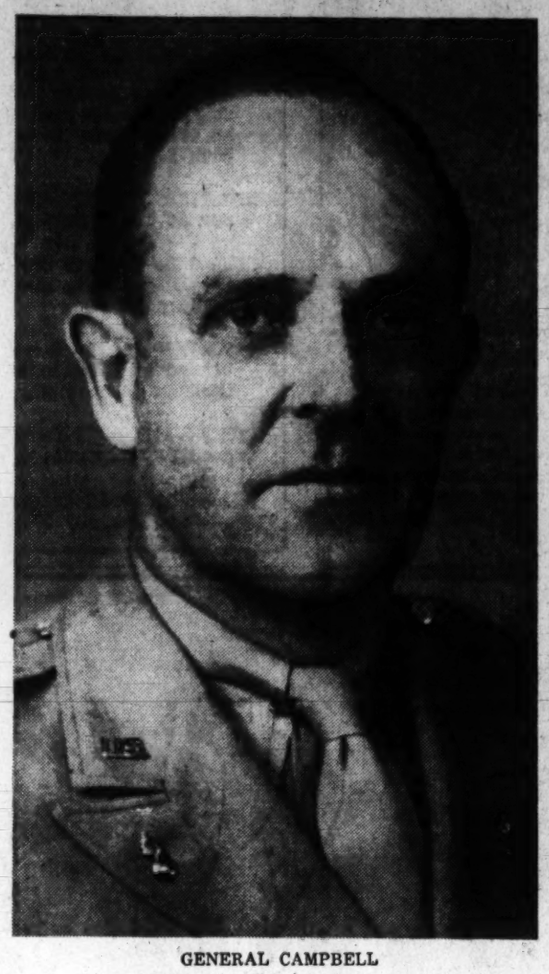
By Patricia Grady

"I'm all for it!"

Maj. Gen. Levin H. Campbell, jr., thus welcomes with sincere enthusiasm the executive order that has stabilized the soaring production curves on the charts of his Army Ordnance Department. When the order came recently for drastic cuts in the manufacture of certain guns, tanks and ammunition, loud were the cries that this move would lose us the war, that Army Ordnance wouldn't take this lying down.

Army Ordnance, in the person of its chief, General Campbell, is taking it standing up and liking it. "In a fluid war," he explains, "we must have a fluid production. We must produce the type of weapon that is necessary for the type of war we are waging at the moment. It's a question of the general offensive, not the production record of a single bureau. As an American citizen I'm delighted with the orders."

This keen-eyed officer with a technician's love for the guns he makes is a rarity in bureaucratic Washington. He would rather fight for his country than fight for his organization. Wanting to see for himself what the vast factories under his supervision are accomplishing, he is apt to pop up at any moment behind an assembly line. He returned about a month ago from England with the definite impression that in view of present circumstances, certain of our war production required realignment.



GENERAL CAMPBELL

Equipment Compares Well

"When I was in England," General Campbell explains, "watching the unloading of guns from the hold of a ship—glistening, perfect guns—and when I knew that several ships in that particular convoy had gone to the bottom, their cargo lost, I wondered if it might be possible to divert some of the steel, some of the man-hours, devoted to building lost cargoes into building protection for our cargoes. That is part of what is being done. Steel and men, diverted from making some of the implements of war that are no longer all-important, will be making corvettes, ships of all kinds, airplanes."

Based on performance in the field and studies of captured equipment, General Campbell comes to some heartening conclusions about our guns, tanks and mechanized equipment. "I can say unequivocally," he comments undramatically but with understandable pride, "that all of our equipment is as good as the enemies'; much of it better."

Intensely human, this general is the planning and production czar for everything that rolls in the Army—except planes and their accoutrements—and everything that shoots. On the walls of General Campbell's Pentagon office are mounted two of his favorite "shooting irons," a Garand rifle like those carried by our troops, which has 2½ times the fire power of enemy rifles, and a light-weight carbine which is now replacing the pistol carried by officers and noncoms. The general likes to take them from the wall and show them to the interested visitor.

An enormous map of the world covers all of one wall, and General Campbell follows it with his eyes as he talks of countries and oceans. Flags flank the desk of this general who believes in action, quick action, and urges his men to take intelligent, rapid steps in an emergency rather than to wait for an ideal solution.

"The General Knows—"

"The general will know," is the stock answer of his officers not only to difficult questions of decision but to complicated questions of fact. Not only has he a prodigious memory but he is an outstanding technician in his field. Though he demands a lot of his men—he is known in some quarters as "Make-'Em-or-Break-'Em Campbell"—he sets even higher work standards for himself and checks into his office before 8 every morning. With his wife and daughter, he lives quietly in his home on Twenty-ninth Street.

One of those service oddities, General Campbell is a native son of Washington and a graduate of the Naval Academy. Before transferring to Ordnance, he served with the Coast Artillery Corps. He had special study in artillery material production and undertook developments of engineering processes which are being utilized to full advantage now. He has inaugurated numerous manufacturing techniques and administrative procedures and during his service at Frankford Arsenal, beginning in 1935, he revolutionized the art of artillery ammunition production in several of its most important phases.

It was General Campbell who brought the method of straight-line quantity production to the Government arsenals and who paved the way for the great expansion of production methods which has characterized the ordnance-industry effort in this war. In January of last year he became an assistant chief of the Industrial Service in the Ordnance Department in charge of all production and on June 1 he took over his duties as Chief of Ordnance of the Army.

Miss Jean L. Stevenson Is Bride of Lieut. W. G. Walsh

St. Alban's Church Scene of Nuptials; Reception at Home After Ceremony

St. Alban's Church was the setting for the wedding last evening of Miss Jean Louise Stevenson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Stevenson, who became the bride of Lieut. William George Walsh, United States Army Air Corps, son of Major and Mrs. William A. Walsh of Washington. The Rev. Charles T. Warner officiated at the ceremony held at 7:30 o'clock. White gladioli and snapdragons decorated the church.

The bride wore an ivory satin gown made with long pointed sleeves and V neckline. The skirt was cut with a long, circular train. Her veil of heirloom Brussels lace was fingertip length and was held with a lace coronet. She carried a cascade bouquet of white lilacs and wore her mother's antique cameo locket on a braided gold chain.

Miss Martha King Harris, who was maid of honor, wore a white faille gown made with a long torso bodice, sweetheart neckline and three-quarter sleeves. She carried red roses tied with pale blue ribbons and wore a cluster of red roses in her hair.

The bridesmaids were Miss Marion K. Smith of Towanda, Pa.; Miss Marion E. Blair of Buffalo, N. Y., Miss Mary Keisker of Washington, and Mrs. George A. Rady of Poolesville, Md. They wore frocks like that of the maid of honor, with similar flowers in their hair and carried bouquets of the same flowers. The little flower girl, Joyce Ann Farrell, was in white taffeta, made with a long skirt and wore a cluster of white flowers in her hair. She carried a basket of red and white rose petals.

Major Walsh was best man for his son and the ushers were Owen O'Hare of Washington, cousin of the bridegroom; George A. Rady of Poolesville, Md.; Robert Browning Sullivan of Washington, cousin of the bride, and Barry C. Sullivan, also a cousin.

A reception was held immediately after the ceremony at the home of the bride's parents, after which the bridal couple left on a wedding trip to New Orleans. Mrs. Walsh wore a cinnamon brown crepe frock with a brown topcoat and alligator accessories and a brown felt hat trimmed with henna and gold velvet flowers. She wore a corsage of green orchids.

'International' Is Word for Senator and Wife

An appropriate symbol of the United Nations arrived in Washington with the Seventy-eighth Congress in the persons of Senator and Mrs. E. V. Robertson of Wyoming. The new Senator, it develops, was born in Wales, while his wife is a native of Canada. Both have lived in this country for a number of years. To the best of their knowledge, the only other Welsh member of the Senate is Senator Davis of Pennsylvania, whom they met for the first time the other evening.

Senator and Mrs. Robertson, who are getting settled in their apartment at the Mayflower, are enthusiastic about Washington, although they admit that it seems a little crowded in comparison with their home in the "wide open spaces" of Wyoming. They live on a ranch 16 miles from Cody.

A stockman by profession, Senator Robertson once served on the Republican National Committee, but other than that has never before participated in politics.

Peruvian Fliers to Visit Here

Following a five-day visit to New York "seeing the town" and its naval installations and aircraft production centers, a group of 10 Peruvian naval officers, the first to graduate from a United States Naval Air Station, will arrive in Washington tomorrow. In the late afternoon—from 6 to 8 o'clock—they will be honor guests at a cocktail party to be given by Col. Armando Revoredo, Air Attache of the Peruvian Embassy, who will entertain at the Mayflower.

The visitors recently won their wings at Corpus Christi, Tex. Five of the group saw action in 1941 in the boundary dispute between Ecuador and Peru, and all have declared they are ready for combat "if the chance should come."

The Peruvian fliers are first of a vanguard of 140 South Americans who will receive aviation training in this country as part of the program of the Office of the Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs for promotion of cultural relations between American Republics and strengthening of defenses in this hemisphere.

Lieut. Comdr. R. M. Gavett, U. S. N. R., who is serving as liaison officer of the Corpus Christi station, and John P. Lee of the Office of Coordination of Inter-American Affairs, are with the fliers in New York.

About 400 officers of the Navy, Army, Marines and Coast Guard, together with their wives and guests, will be in attendance at the affair which will begin at 9 o'clock.

The visitors have just returned from Brazil, where Mr. Biddle completed murals in the public library at Rio de Janeiro. Mrs. Biddle, who is known professionally as Helene Sardeau, did the bas reliefs that went with the murals.

The George Biddles will come down from New York to spend the weekend with the Attorney General and his wife.

Captain Ewen And Bride in Harrisburg, Pa.

Following their marriage on Sunday, Capt. John Meiggs Ewen and his bride, the former Miss Mary Elizabeth Tyree, left for Harrisburg, Pa., where Captain Ewen is attending the Army Air Force Intelligence School.

The ceremony took place at 3:30 o'clock with the Rev. Seth Brooks officiating. The bride is the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Tyree of Lynches, Va. For her wedding she wore a long powder blue crepe gown made on Grecian lines with gold accessories and a small blue ostrich hat with a veil. She carried her mother's Bible, to which was fastened an orchid. Charles Terrell Tyree gave his sister in marriage.

Mrs. Leon Moffat Logan, who was matron of honor, wore a chartreuse and blue gown with a chartreuse hat, and a corsage of talisman roses. Stephen Milton Simpson, brother-in-law of the bridegroom, served as best man.

A reception at the home of the bride's sister, Miss Roxey Tyree, followed the ceremony.

The bride is a descendant of the Lynch and Douglas families, who were prominent in the early political life of Virginia. Her great-great-grandfather, Col. John Lynch, was the founder of the city of Lynchburg. She attended the University of Virginia and George Washington University.

Captain Ewen is the son of the late Mr. and Mrs. John Meiggs Ewen of Chicago. He was educated at Harrow, England; Chateau de Lancy, Geneva; the Hill School at Pottstown, Pa. He received his A. B. degree from Yale University, and his LL.B. degree at Harvard.

Captain Ewen, through his mother, the former Miss Grace Patterson, is a member of the well-known Patterson family of Chicago.

Random Notes, Picked Up in Passing, on Persons And Portents of More Than Passing Importance

If a couple of newspapermen who not long ago wrote amusing stories about Clare Boothe Luce's first meeting with the press women had been on hand for the Women's National Press Club dinner on Tuesday evening, they would have seen some of their direful predictions go up in smoke. That get-together proved one point for all time—La Luce is going to have plenty of support from the petticoat press from now on out. There will be no forthcoming cat fight between the gentlewoman from Connecticut and the women who cover Capitol Hill. Truth of the matter is, we reporters were enchanted with her speech Tuesday evening, her answers to the barrage of questions we fired at her later, and the manner in which she and her pretty congressional colleague, Winifred Stanley, carried on a devoted "sister act" as if they had been rehearsing it for months.

Clare Luce

Of course all of us loved Clare Luce's story about how, on that cold opening day of Congress, she tied her scarf over her head to protect her blonde curls from the wind, posed for pictures on the Capitol steps, and then learned later, to her dismay, that she had offended her hatmaking constituents. But she's going to make up for it soon, she promised. Within a few days, she said she would be wearing a hat that'll keep the press busy describing it for a week, at least. Yes, it's coming from Connecticut.

'Philanthropist,' No Appeal for Her

Mention of one attractive Congresswoman reminds me of another whom the press women got to know a lot better the other evening. She's attractive Representative Frances Bolton of Ohio, who has a great deal more to recommend her than that title of "richest woman in Congress" so frequently tossed in her direction.

Smart, trim and alert, Mrs. Bolton goes quietly about her business with a minimum of fanfare and a sincere desire to do her work well with as little publicity as possible. But on occasions when her record of achievement does find its way into print, she wishes it could be viewed from a different angle. "I'm always referred to as a 'philanthropist and a patron of music,'" she said with a sigh the other evening. "Actually, I've had a pretty wide range of experience. I've been a waitress, a nurse, a teacher. My interest in music is not particularly on the sponsoring side but in singing myself . . . although I don't have much time for that now. I'd give anything if I could be something in print besides 'a philanthropist and a patron of music'—just for a change."

Frances Bolton

First thing Mrs. Bolton should do is to have a lot of new photographs made. I've never seen a one that does justice to her handsome face with its nicely chiseled features and her lovely blue eyes . . . and the twinkle that proves she doesn't fake herself too seriously.

'Nothing Too Good for a Tanker'

If I had today free, I'd certainly be over in Baltimore this afternoon to watch my good friend, Isabel Kinnear Griffin, smash that traditional bottle of champagne across the prow of the 16,000-ton tanker, the S. S. Dartmouth. Although she is keenly aware of the maritime superstition that if the bottle doesn't break on the first swing, the boat is doomed, Isabel has no qualms. "I know I'll be able to break it," she said yesterday, "because I've had such good training. You see, I once had to make up three years' gym work in one college semester. It was spring, and baseball was the course. I had 12 classes in baseball a week, and I got to be a first-rate swatter. So whether it's a ball, or a bottle, I know how to hit it."

Shortly after she received her invitation to be sponsor, however, Isabel was beset with a real problem—whether to take time out to buy a new ensemble for the occasion, or make an old one do. Finally, as she put it, "I decided to get an entirely new outfit . . . because nothing is too good for a tanker."

So today, at the appointed time, there will be a completely new outfitted sponsor to smash that bottle and watch the Maritime Commission's newest ship roll out to sea.

Pamphlet Proof That Hawaii Carries On

"We meet such interesting" . . . magazines. To my desk recently have come two publications I wish every American might have a chance to read. Both are from Hawaii where in former years "nothing ever happened," and both present vivid pictures of how the mid-Pacific territory has changed its order of living and has become a center of world-shaping events.

Gen. Emmons

One is the holiday issue of Hawaii's famous illustrated monthly magazine, Paradise of the Pacific, which, incidentally, notes as its cable address Paradise. The other, published by the Honolulu Star Bulletin, is entitled "Hawaii at War" and is a complete record of the first six months of Hawaii's record in the new World War, beginning with the bombing on December 7.

The "Paradise" pamphlet is a stunning work of art, complete with color photographs, timely messages by Lieut. Gen. Delos Emmons, Rear Admiral D. W. Bagley and Brig. Gen. H. K. Pickett and a series of stories sketching in broad outline the picture of how the new Hawaii is contributing materially to the war effort.

Informal Fete Honors Sergt. Here on Leave

"It's the biggest thrill I've had in a year . . . and I feel exactly like a debutante." Those were the words of Staff Sergt. Samuel J. Watt, just returned from 11 months' duty in the Pacific, as he made his bow to a representative number of Capitalites late yesterday afternoon.

The event, a 5-to-8 informal get-together, took place in the Carlyn Apartment of Lieut. and Mrs. Edward Treglown, and joint hosts with them were Baron and Baroness Stackelberg and C. B. Porter. About 60 guests, drawn from the diplomatic, official and residential contingents, were on hand for the party arranged in honor of Sergeant Watt, who will be off soon to Port Washington, Md., to enter officers' training school.

"Just wait'll I write my buddy, Ralph McKee—he's still in the Pacific—and tell him what a party this was," said Watt, looking over the distinguished crowd that gathered in to meet him. "He'll never believe I met all these important people in one afternoon . . . and that most of them came to my party by bus and streetcar." The trio of hosts and the two hostesses decided on the Treglowns' apartment as the locale for the fete because it is centrally located, and can be reached by all types of conveyances not restricted by the OPA ban on pleasure driving.

Miss Jean Hearn Back at School

Miss Jean Hearn, daughter of Gen. and Mrs. Thomas G. Hearn, has left to return to her studies at Stephens College, Mo., after spending the holiday season with her grandmother, Mrs. Edgar Jadwin, at her home on Massachusetts Avenue.

General Hearn is chief of staff to General Stilwell in China, and Mrs. Hearn is living in California. Miss Hearn was a visitor in Washington last summer. She will graduate from college in June.

'Walk Over For Dinner' Sets New Note

"Walk over for some quail dinner."

That was the invitation sent out by Mr. and Mrs. Hubert Phipps a few days ago, asking their friends to come in and share the quail that they had shot on their recent trip to Florida. But a "walk" in the Phipps' community in Rectortown, Va., is more like a hike and their guests proved they knew it would be a pleasure by their cross-country treks.

Mr. and Mrs. Phipps just returned to their home, Rockburn, after spending the holidays at Palm Beach with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Jay S. Phipps. They also visited their sister-in-law, Mrs. Ben Phipps, at Tallahassee, whose husband, Capt. Phipps, is now in the service.

Mrs. Phipps brought back from her trip news of her brothers, who are both well known in Virginia. William J. Gordon, who has been flying as pilot with Eastern Air Lines for two years, has recently been promoted to captain and is now flying equipment from Miami to Brazil. Another brother, Lieut. Harris Bucklin, jr. of Providence, R. I., who has been on duty at Fort Robinson, Nebr., has been transferred to the Dog Training School in San Carlos, Calif. Lieutenant Bucklin is a member of the Fauquier-Loudoun Polo Club and has played many games with the team.

His Embassy Will Honor Distinguished British Star

Delegation to Greet C. Aubrey Smith Monday; 'United Nations Week' Inaugurated Today; Items of News and Gossip of the Theater

A DELEGATION from the British Embassy will attend the opening performance of Guthrie McClintic's production of "Spring Again," Monday night at the National Theater, to pay honor to the veteran C. Aubrey Smith, costarred with Grace George in the Broadway comedy hit.

PAUL MUNI

This will be an eminently appropriate gesture on the part of the venerable actor's fellow-countrymen. I know of no other player in the contemporary theater who so completely personifies the physical, mental and spiritual sturdiness of Britain as this stalwart of the sock and buskin, rounding out a full half-century of devotion to the highest traditions of the stage and, more latterly, of the screen. Not only on, but off, C. Aubrey Smith is the living symbol of his country. After years of honorable service on the boards, one of his first acts upon arrival in Hollywood was the organization of a cricket league among his fellow-Britishers in films—a game in which he was, typically enough, a champion all the way from England to the Antipodes.

His expression of nationality, however, has not been confined to the field of sports. A finished musician, he has, among other worthy things, set Kipling's "Barrack Room Ballads" to music. Likewise, he has set a willing hand and heart to the furtherance of everything that could aid in the eventual triumph of his country in the war.

His appearance here in "Spring Again" will mark this distinguished visitor's first performance in the Capital since he played here years ago in "The Bachelor Father." That would be something like a decade and a half ago. During the interim he has been principally busy in bringing some of its most memorable characterizations to the screen.

Because of a previous commitment, Dave Apollon, the popular international comedian, who has been headlining the stage bill at the Earle these past two weeks, will not appear there in any of the stage performances today. Managing Director Harry Anger, therefore, has arranged to fill the breach by presenting the Kim Loo Sisters, harmony vocalists, in the Apollon spot, at all shows today. So now you know.

Speaking of the Earle, this would be as good a time as any to divulge that tomorrow only the Thirteenth Street doors will be open to the public a full half-hour earlier than usual. The latches will be sprung at 10 a. m., with the screen feature opening tomorrow will be "Road to Morocco," costarring Bing Crosby, Bob Hope and Dorothy Lamour, this seems a wise precaution to forestall the stampede of cash customers who will be clamoring to get in. "Road to Morocco," as we attempted to intimate while we were still suffering the happy cramps of laughter from the preview, is probably the most delightfully screwy bit of innocuous insanity in which these road agents have so far been seen.

It Gets Under Way Today

Plans for the observation of "United Nations Week" in the Capital are rapidly taking shape. The special week begins today and will extend through Wednesday, January 20. Some 16,000 theaters with an estimated weekly attendance of 15 million patrons are participating in this gesture toward Allied solidarity. Of the preview of "The Commandos Strike at Dawn" tonight, the presentation of "You, John Jones," costarring James Cagney and Ann Sothern, and the preview of "Hitler's Children," at RKO-Keith's, on Wednesday, January 20, Washington is already aware. In addition to those items, a new 2-cent "United Nations" stamp is being gotten out by the Postoffice Department; the District Commmissioners are issuing a "United Nations" proclamation today; the Board of Education is cooperating with the theaters in a "School Parade of Pennies;" "United Nations" medleys will be featured by the orchestras at both the Earle and Capitol Theaters, and a special display of posters from the nations concerned will be on display in the Capitol Theater lobby. And more to come.

For the benefit of any who may be keeping books on it, the sale of war bonds entitling purchasers to free seats to the opening performance of "The Ice-Capades of 1943," at Uline's Arena next Tuesday night, January 19, now has passed the $400,000 mark and is rapidly creeping up on half a million. A surprising aspect of the whole thing, according to Ticket Chairman Sam Wheeler, is the enthusiasm that is being expressed, even by the buyers of the bonds of higher denominations, over the prospect of reaching Uline's by public conveyances or afoot, in conformity with current rationing regulations. From those in high places to the theoretical "man in the street," the transportation problem is universally identifying itself as "part of the fun." Maybe by that time the streets will freeze and we can all skate over!

Honored by Notable Invitational Preview Tonight

AND WHEN THEY DO, THEY STRIKE HARD! A scene from Columbia's production of "The Commandos Strike at Dawn," to be given a special, invitational preview in the Departmental Auditorium tonight, under the auspices of Ambassador Wilhelm Munthe de Morgenstierne of Norway, in whose country the action of the drama is laid. Starring Paul Muni, Lillian Gish, Sir Cedric Hardwicke and others of note, this stirring subject later will be put on public view at the Earle Theater

LOUELLA O. PARSONS

Greenstreet to Shine Among Stars

Hollywood, Jan. 13 (INS).—In the good old days of silent movies Theodore Roberts, the cigar-smoking star in his sixties, competed with the young stars for fame. Since that time there has been no man of Roberts' age to take his place. So Jack Warner feels that Sydney Greenstreet, who has great charm and ability, should be a star. With all the younger men off to war, this is a propitious time to bring an older man into the picture. Greenstreet's first starring vehicle is "The Pentacle," a mystery thriller-diller.

RONALD REAGAN

The public, in the past, to return to the subject of older stars, has proved its willingness to take to their hearts certain of the older people. For instance, Marie Dressler, May Robson and Edna May Oliver were all able to carry a picture and were all beloved by the fans.

Wonderful to see Billy Gaxton so enthusiastic over his new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer assignment. Billy, Victor Moore, Gregory Ratoff and Mervyn Leroy were all having dinner together and as you can readily guess the discussion was on "best foot forward," the musical comedy that brings my old friend on the MGM lot.

Billy will have the beauteous Lucille Ball as his screen partner and what more can any Broadway actor ask, even as successful a one as Gaxton? Later he and Victor Moore move to Columbia for "Tropicana." "What about the farm?" I asked. "Madeleine is closing it up and joining me here where we will be until summer or maybe longer," was the reply.

If the Government says yes, Warners will put Lieut. Ronald Reagan in one of the top spots in "This Is the Army," but it cannot be done without Uncle Sam's permission. Ronnie is holding down two jobs and working very hard at the Roach Studios, where he is stationed. Jean Gabin has already offered his services free and so has Ginger Rogers. And today Lieut. Col. Francis T. McCabe arrives to act as liaison officer between Warners and the Army, and to give technical advice. Colonel McCabe was appointed by General Surles, head of the Army Public Relations, at the request of Jack Warner. That means, with Colonel McCabe right on the lot, they won't have to be running to the War Department every five minutes to see what they can film and what they can't film.

Screen Villain's Light Humor Is Still 'Heavy'

Sheldon Leonard, famous villain of the screen, is through playing practical jokes with the genius of Hollywood make-up men.

Recently the make-up man on "Lucky Jordan," Alan Ladd's current starring picture, had to paint a realistically gruesome bruised eye on Sheldon. It was supposed to be the aftermath of a kick in the side of the head by Ladd. It was a colorful effect of black, blue and red.

So real did it look that Leonard yielded to the temptation of going home with it on to give his wife a "jolt." Although he has been in 14 pictures, Mrs. Leonard wasn't accustomed to such movie realism and took the bruised eye so seriously that she started to "feel over" the minute she caught a glimpse of the horrible accident. Leonard couldn't get close enough to show her that it was make-up, so ruined a handkerchief by hurriedly wiping off the black eye.

Broadway's Pulse Beat

New York, Jan. 13.

The long rumored resignation of Thurman Arnold, the trust-buster, at last is eventualizing: Arnold will get a Federal judgeship—probably the Circuit Court judgeship vacated by Rutledge's appointment to the Supreme Court . . . During Jim Farley's trip to Mexico he will confer with John Nance Garner and also with Joseph P. Kennedy, who may have a Mexican business venture with which to interest Farley . . . Henry J. Kaiser's enterprises are not geared for war production alone. He confides that they quickly can be switched to the manufacture of pre-fabricated houses and other products which will be required in post-war America.

AL JOLSON

Governor Lehman's new division will be shifted from a United States agency to a United Nations one . . . Eric Knight, author of "This Above All," has been promoted to major . . . The "Ziegfeld Follies" dances to be staged by Jack Cole will be based upon the drawings in Al Hirschfeld's book "Harlem" . . . French and State department politics were behind the cancellation of the Carnegie concert sponsored by "Pour le Victoire" . . . The Greenwood Cemetery grave diggers have joined Local 293 of the United Canning, Agricultural, Packing & Allied Workers Union.

John Ringling North and Henry Ringling North, president and vice president, respectively, of the Ringling Bros. Circus, now are on a leave of absence from the circus, with full pay. The Norths had proposed that, after obtaining President Roosevelt's consent, the circus go on tour next season, with the full profits going to the Red Cross and other war charities. The circus' directors rejected the suggestion . . . Norman Bel Geddes, who was to have worked with the new circus, has stepped out . . . The new head of the Ringling Bros., Barnum & Bailey Circus is expected to be Robert Ringling, a former singer who never before has operated a circus.

Eva Le Gallienne will do her first radio serial, for the Blue Network—a horror story series, written by Mort Lewis, in which she will be the narrator . . . Al Jolson reports that the most uncomfortable part of his flights to entertain the soldiers overseas was the necessity of being inoculated. Jolson feared those inoculations. "Frankly," he confesses, "I needed a shot in the arm for those shots in the arm" . . . The Peter Arno-Ed Wynn musical, which was about to go into rehearsal, has been called off until next fall . . . Dagmar Godowsky, who has had a most colorful career, is telling all in an autobiography which she now is completing.

Lynn Fontanne is an admirer of Serge Rachmaninoff. She once saw the composer on Fifth Avenue, looking into a shop window, and stationed herself beside him. When the man walked to another shop, she again followed him. He started walking uptown, and the noted actress walked behind him—until he disappeared into a cab . . . Miss Fontanne reported this to Walter Damrosch, who promised to arrange a meeting, at a tea party. There she at last was introduced to Serge Rachmaninoff, and asked Damrosch: "But he isn't the pianist, is he?" . . . "Of course," said Damrosch . . . "He couldn't be," Miss Fontanne insisted. "He isn't the man I followed on Fifth Avenue."

Paul Draper's trip overseas to the Army camps has been postponed. The dancer needed additional papers—because he was born in Italy . . . Bing Crosby, Dinah Shore, Paul Whiteman and Larry Adler, the harmonica player now at the Savoy-Plaza, will do an all-Gershwin program in Hollywood . . . When Billy Rose read the story of George Jean Nathan having been slugged by two men on Fifty-third Street, he offered the critic the revolver which was presented to him by the grateful citizens of Texas. "Get a permit, and I'll give you my gun," Rose offered. Nathan declined, explaining: "What good would it do me? They hit me from behind."

Sherman Billingsley, proprietor of the Stork Club, hired two private detectives to pose as customers on a busy night to observe the bartenders, waiters and busboys and try to detect any possible misdeeds . . . Last night the detective agency submitted its bill for the services of two men on Saturday night. Billingsley immediately phoned the agency and complained: "But those men didn't show up. I was in my club all night, and didn't see them" . . . "That's true, but it wasn't their fault," was the explanation. "They tried to get into the Stork Club—but the doorman barred them."

Columbia

Nothing is sacred, not even the traditions of the Old South, when that old ghost debunker, "The Fox," gets on the job. Bringing riot and comedy with him, Red Skelton is hot on the trail of murder and buried treasure in "Whistling in Dixie," arriving today at the Columbia Theater.

About to be wedded to Ann Rutherford, Red finds his scheduled honeymoon detoured into the land of magnolias and moonshine. In short order he tracks down the Civil War treasure and unveils the culprits, but the wedding never does come off. Which means we can expect him back soon in the same role.

Stars in Technicolor Screen Spectacle

as she will be seen in the stellar role of Walter Wanger's romantic musical spectacle, in Technicolor, bearing the completely expository title of "Arabian Nights," next at RKO-Keith's Theater. Prominent in the surrounding cast are such as Jon Hall, male costar; Leif Erickson, Sabu and a bevy of specially handpicked "harem beauties," including Washington's Helen Pender

A Notable Revival at the Little

Two young people caught up in the maelstrom of events against a background of the First World War provide a moving tale in the newest revival to reach the screen of the Little Theater. Starring Robert Taylor and Vivien Leigh, "Waterloo Bridge" is vigorous and compelling in its tragic narration of a generation which sought frantically to find happiness in an era of misery and destruction.

Based on the play by Robert E. Sherwood, "Waterloo Bridge" is the story of a boy and girl who meet and fall in love and in the brief span of 48 hours plan their future together, almost in defiance of the darkness which the future portends.

When news of the boy's death at the front reaches the girl she reembraces her former pessimistic philosophy. Faced with poverty and unemployment, Myra takes up "the world's oldest profession" only to be faced with the miracle of Roy's safe return.

Here the film deals with the efforts of the girl to readjust herself emotionally while consistently confronted with the ethical conventions of society. When she realizes that she cannot disregard her brief career in the streets, she takes her life at the same spot where the lovers first met.

As Roy and Myra, Robert Taylor and Vivien Leigh are both excellent in roles that require understanding and command of a variety of emotions. Miss Leigh, in particular, is convincing in both the later moments of the film and delightfully charming in the earlier, and happier portion of the story.

Lucile Watson and Virginia Field head the supporting cast, which includes C. Aubrey Smith, Maria Ouspenskaya and Steffi Duna.

Mervyn LeRoy's direction is well-paced, making the most of the tie-up between the present war and the last one. E. L. S.

Unique Debut

Claude Rains, featured in "Now, Voyager," has a unique screen debut to his credit. He wasn't seen on the screen in "The Invisible Man," in which he played the title role.

HEDDA HOPPER

'Oscar' Should Follow the Flag!

Hollywood, Calif., Jan. 13.—If "Yankee Doodle Dandy" wins the Academy Award this year—and here's hoping—it will be the third musical to get that honor, the other two being "Broadway Melody" of 1929 and "The Great Ziegfeld" of 1935. I'm rooting for Jimmy Gagney as the best star, Walter Huston as best supporting actor in "Yankee," either Greer Garson or Teresa Wright for best female star, Agnes Moorehead of "Magnificent Ambersons" as supporting actress. A special award to those zany comics, Abott and Costello; another to Mrs. George M. Cohan, because this is the year they did her husband's life. It also marked the passing of "Yankee Doodle" himself, the greatest single contributor to show business ever born in this country. With Uncle Sam's men making history on all fronts, let's make it a Yankee Doodle Dandy year.

JAMES CAGNEY

No Change of Pace

Ida Lupina may be objecting to those psychopathic roles, but evidently Twentieth Century hasn't heard of it, because her next will be "Porcelain Lady," a pathological murder "draymah" which finds her going through the same routine she did in "They Drive by Night." . . . Wonder if Paramount realized the inflammability of film when they teamed Bob Hope and Betty Hutton. Singly these two have enough pep to start a small blaze; together their antics should create a conflagration. . . . Anna Sten's agent is saying Sam Goldwyn is paging her for "North Star," but Sam wouldn't have her again if she played an extra. . . . Gene Tierney, and not Linda Darnell, is testing for the lead in Herr Lubitsch's picture.

You Can Too Guess!

What glamour girl, after that famous party given for the Harry Hopkinses, sent Harry the following wire: "If there's a crumb left, remember me," Signed it "Madame Chiang Kai-shek"? . . . Kay Kiser is taking his gang, plus Ann Miller and George Carroll, to Fort MacAuthur. I'm tagging along for old age security. . . . Gosh! You've never heard such a rave as Producer Dick Blumenthal put on about Loretta Young and her work in "China." . . . I was looking forward to listening to J. Cheever Chowdin on the American Forum of the Air about the President's $25,000 salary ceiling, and now begosh, he's backed out!

With Lana Turner's annulment hitting the headlines, why don't the studios demand that before their glamour girls marry, their husbands fill out a questionnaire like we all have to do at the studios?. . . . Our first gin rummy divorce victims were Jacqueline Dalya and Bill Conselman. Jacqueline said he'd leave her in the middle of a hanging participle to play the game with anybody . . . It's still serious between Nancy Coleman and Tonio Selwart. Nancy said she had only one date with Charlie Chaplin. Her comment—"Too dull." . . . Ha, ha, Mona Maris has turned writer. Maybe she's just combining it with romance. Anyway she's collaborating with Budd Schulberg on a Latin-American story—as tho he needed any collaboration, except to learn Spanish!

Wouldn't you hate to be the one to have to tell Miriam Hopkins and Bette Davis that at the finish of "Old Acquaintance" they have to stop being sweet to each other and get in there and pitch—and I don't mean woo! The end of the story has been rewritten that way, and that's the way the girls will slap it out Completely vindicating those who thought they perceived unique qualities of entertainment in Leo McCarey's novel story, "Once Upon a Honeymoon" is sailing blithely along into its fourth week on the screen at RKO-Keith's. Ginger Rogers, Cary Grant, Walter Slezak and Albert Dekker are chiefly responsible for an engrossing interpretation of a comedy-drama that traverses Europe one leap ahead of the Nazi scourge—of which Mr. Slezak is one of the high emissaries. Miss Rogers and Mr. Grant eventually bring him down to proper level. All engagingly supported by a particularly effective combination of short-reel subjects which also are continuing.

RKO-Keith's

Friend to Windsors Arrested in Africa

Bedaux Reportedly Taken for Trading With Enemy

By Hugo Speck
International News Service Staff Writer

Secretary of State Hull yesterday announced Charles E. Bedaux, former close friend of the Duke of Windsor and "protector" of the couple's interests prior to their marriage, has been arrested in French North Africa.

Although the Secretary declared he had no details concerning the circumstances under which Bedaux was taken into custody or with what he was charged, it was learned the millionaire "mystery man" was arrested for "trading" with the enemy.

As such, Bedaux, who is internationally known for his perfection and sale of an industrial "speed-up" system, is liable to 10 years imprisonment and a $10,000 fine plus the forfeiture of all his property used in the operations.

Dispatches from London declared his arrest came as no surprise to correspondents who have been in North Africa because of his out-and-out pro-Vichy activities in Algiers. But still unexplained is how Bedaux managed to reach North Africa as a free agent when he was last reported to have been arrested with his wife by the Germans in Paris last September.

Associated With Windsors

Since that time nothing has been heard of him publicly and the fact that he was in Algiers when American troops invaded North Africa last November has not been announced previously.

Although well known for his "speed-up" system, which he has sold in the United States and several European countries, he gained more international prominence through his associations with the Windsors.

When the duke was waiting for the then Mrs. Simpson's divorce decree to become final, the duchess was the guest of the Bedauxes at their Chateau de Cande, in Tours, France, where the duke and duchess were married in 1937.

It was also Bedaux who attempted to make arrangements for the duke and duchess to visit this country several months later so the duke could study American industrial methods. Such violent protests were made by American labor organizations, which considered Bedaux' system unfair to labor, that the contemplated visit was canceled.

Of French birth, Bedaux became a naturalized American citizen before the last war. Prior to his phenomenal sky-rocket to success he married Blanche Marie Allen of St. Louis but he divorced her and later married the former Fern Lombard of Grand Rapids, Mich. He has one son, Charles, jr., from his first marriage.

International society was never able to explain how he come to be such a close friend of the Windsors. Although he was a well known European figure with a French chateau, a shooting box in Scotland, a permanent suite at the Ritz in Paris and a Fifth Avenue apartment in New York, the Bedauxs had never cut any sizable swath in continental social circles.

MacArthur Sees Munda Campaign Virtually Ended

Allied Headquarters in Australia (Wednesday), Jan. (AP).—Allied ground forces gained against the only Japs still holding out in the Papuan Peninsula of New Guinea at Sanananda, the high command announced today.

Only a fragment of the one-time Jap Papuan army of 15,000 still clings to that point west of Buna and the enemy situation has been viewed as so hopeless that Gen. Douglas MacArthur returned from the field last week to his Australian headquarters, indicating that to all intents and purposes that campaign has ended with the Jap army's destruction.

Long-range bombers and attack planes yesterday raided what is regarded as the next probable sector of ground action, the Lae-Salamaua area northwest of Buna. The planes bombed and strafed the trail to Komiatum, destroying a bridge.
